Module EMT Course Set

SCC offers emergency medical training to area residents.

The program is sponsored by the adult education department of Southeastern Community College, and will be taught by Eric A. Brandt. He is a new employee at the college. He graduated from Western Carolina University in 1977 with a BSHS in emergency care.

Unlike the standard 81 hours emergency medical technicians course, Southeastern offers the module EMT course. This program is a self-paced, self-instructional course which is designed to train the student in the use of current emergency care procedures.

Very little time is spent on those skills and concepts already developed and known by the students, while those students who may need extra training on certain skills may do so without fear of "falling behind". This course has proven most successful for those students who work full time as they may schedule their hours at the open lab whenever it is most convenient for them.

The modular program was developed by Appalachian State University and is promoted by the office of emergency medical services. Any interested person who is at least 18 years of age is eligible. To meet requirements of the course, each student must successfully complete 10 modules for the course and final exam. Ten hours of practical experience in a local emergency room is also required.

There is no charge for members of fire and rescue association; there is a $5 fee for those who are not members.

This course provides flexibility, privacy and freedom for the student while promoting individual competency. Those who successfully complete the course may apply for state certification and testing.

SCC's Fall Listings

Registration will be Sep. 1 from 9 a.m. until 3 p.m., with evening course registration to be Aug. 31, 6-9 p.m.

Real Estate Course

The Southeastern Times June 7, 1978

Offered At SCC

Southeastern Community College will offer a course in Real Estate Fundamentals on Tuesday evenings from 7 p.m. until 10 p.m. beginning June 6.

Classes will meet weekly for a total of eleven weeks. Students who complete the course with a final grade of 70 or better will be eligible to apply for the state licensing examination in order to become a licensed real estate broker or salesman.

The thirty-three hour course is designed to provide the student with a basic understanding of real estate practices, laws, and regulations. Subjects which will be offered in the course include licensing laws, rules and regulations, real estate definitions, contracts, types of ownership, and real estate mathematics.

Additional subjects to be covered include agency operations and laws, real estate financing, and closing procedures. The student will be expected to put in a number of hours of study outside of the classroom in order to cover the required course material and insure an adequate level of preparation for the state licensing examination.

While the course is designed primarily for those who desire to obtain a real estate license, it should be of interest to anyone who desires to learn more about property ownership. Home ownership continues to be a popular inflation fighting investment, and for the majority of families purchasing a home, is the largest single investment they will ever make. Because of the complexity of today's real estate laws, it is important that the prospective property owner have a basic understanding of real estate transactions and laws which affect property ownership. Southeastern's real estate course will provide the student with this information through the study of state laws and regulations and practical examples of real estate transactions.

Interested person may register for BUS 297, Real Estate Fundamentals, between the hours of 6 p.m. and 9 p.m. on Monday, June 5th, or prior to the beginning of the first class meeting at 7 p.m. on Tuesday, June 6th. For additional information concerning this course or other courses available during the summer quarter, please call 642-7141.

Overturn Of Ruling Is Sought

Robesonian 8-24-7

WHITEVILLE — The United States Supreme Court has been asked by Southeastern Community College to overturn a decision by the U.S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals in which the school was ordered to admit a Fairmont woman into its nursing program.

Southeastern filed a petition with the nation's highest court, asking for a hearing. The Supreme Court should accept or deny the petition within three weeks.

The Court of Appeals ruled earlier this year that Mrs. Frances B. Davis should be admitted into the nursing program, even though she has a hearing impairment. Mrs. Davis was denied admission to the school in 1976.

After she was not allowed to enroll in the school, Mrs. Davis filed a suit against Southeastern, charging that the 14th amendment of the Constitution protects citizens with physical handicaps from discrimination.

The district court upheld Southeastern's decision, but the Court of Appeals later ruled that Mrs. Davis had been denied equal protection. The court said that a person cannot be denied admission by reason of handicap alone.

Mrs. Davis earned her licensed practical nursing degree from Robeson Technical Institute. She was among 100 applicants competing for 40 positions at Southeastern.

College Opens Women's Center

News Reporter January 30 1978

On Wednesday, Feb. 1, Southeastern Community College will open a "Women's Center" in the school counseling trailer. The counseling trailer is located at the back of the SCC campus, near the bookstore.

Hours for the new operation will be 10 a.m. until 2 p.m. Monday through Friday. On opening day, coffee and doughnuts will be served from 10 a.m. until 2 p.m.

SCC WOMEN will have a place of their own when the SCC Women's Center opens Wednesday, Feb. 1. On opening day coffee and doughnuts will be served from 10 a.m. until 2 p.m., the regular Monday through Friday hours of the center. The center will be in the counseling trailer at the back of the campus, and counseling services will be available as well as simply the opportunity to relax. Use of the center is not restricted to women. Pictured above are several members of the SCC staff, most of whom will be available for counseling.

The women's center is designed to be a social and educational center for women students, according to a spokesman for SCC. It will be the intention of the center to provide opportunities for women to share their similar concerns, and a place where they can feel they are an integral part of the campus.

Peer counseling by trained student counselors is another important service which will be available at the center. The student counselors who will be working with the center include Shirley Brown of Bladenboro; Lois Willetts of Whiteville; Janice Singletary of Supply; and Sherry Todd of Bladenboro.

All interested people in the community and all currently enrolled students at SCC are encouraged to participate. Men are welcome, and women are especially encouraged to use the center's services.

For more information or the center's activities and programs, call 642-6356.

SCC Women's Center Open

The Women's Center at Southeastern Community College has been open for four weeks. First-time visitors are sometimes curious and hesitant, since they do not know exactly what a Women's Center is, a spokesman at SCC said. On opening day 40 to 50 women visited the Center.

Located on the SCC campus, the Center is a place for adult, female students to gather between classes to study, visit, wait or read. Student counselors are also available for those who seek their services.

Each Wednesday at 12:20 p.m. special programs are presented in the Center. The programs deal with topics of interest to women, featuring speakers, slide tape presentations and discussion groups. Suggestions for programs are welcome.

Women visiting the Center have stressed the importance of having a place to gather, saying that non-traditional students often feel left out or out of place in a regular college setting. Many feel that having a place to meet and talk to each other about their goals and interest gives them encouragement. Finding approval and support for continuing education is extremely valuable to a student who has been out of school for a period of time.

Those working with the Center welcome women of the college and the community to visit the Women's Center. For further information call the college, 642-7141.

Want To Hire College Student During Summer?

News Reporter
Jan. 23 1978

Southeastern Community College will host a meeting Thursday conducted by the Plan Assuring College Education (PACE), Inc. Office in Raleigh for non-profit organizations who are interested in employing college students during the summer.

P.A.C.E. works in conjunction with the college financial aid officers in the state. Through this work they place eligible college students in non-profit agencies to help earn money to finance their college education. Eighty percent of these students' salaries will be paid by the certifying colleges.

Persons who are interested in learning how they can help finance a student's education while reaping the benefits of obtaining a fulltime employee at a minimum cost to their agency are invited to attend this meeting scheduled at 10:30 a.m. in the Board Room of the Southeastern Community College Administration building, Thursday morning.

Legislative Day At Southeastern

News Reporter 3-27-78

The board of trustees of Southeastern Community College held their regular bi-monthly meeting on Thursday in the boardroom of the college with Chairman Willard Small presiding. Other members present included Billy Hooks, S.G. Koonce, Mrs. Myrtle Soles, John Munroe, Mrs. Carolyn Roberts, J. Richard Maxwell, J. Herman Leder, Henry Wyche, and John Frank Carter.

Wyche was named chairman of a nominating committee to service along with J. Richard Maxwell and John Frank Carter to nominate the officers for the next year to the board.

A presentation by James Clifton, coordinator of the Social Science Department, illuminated the multi-faceted discipline for the board members. There are presently six instructors teaching 36 courses, which include remedial and advanced histories, anthropology, and humanities. Some of the anthropology and humanities courses offer statewide, national, and international travel. The Model United Nations Program has provided SCC and area high school students an opportunity to see how the United Nations concept operates. The department members are involved in teaching courses in the community as well as making presentations to various civic, educational, and cultural groups.

The board members were invited to participate in SCC Legislative Day which is designated for March 30. The intent of this special day is to involve them, as well as our legislators, in the day to day activities of the campus with the hope that through this exposure they will become more fully aware of our strengths, needs and aspirations for the future.

Other business of the meeting included routine approvals of personnel, financial transactions, and distribution of information.

News Reporter Feb. 16 1978

The Southeastern Community Players have postponed their production of "You Can't Take It With You." The play was to have been presented Feb. 16 and 17 in the college auditorium.

However, plagued by illness and cast drop-outs, a complete cast had not been assembled in time for dress rehearsal. Since the Moss Hart and George S. Kaufman comedy requires practiced interplay between the characters, a later date will be set. It is the goal of the group to deliver good productions, not just "put on plays," a spokesman said.

A cast for featured roles had been assembled, including Orren Pickard, Marguerite Sprott, Jenny McKennon Wright, Sam Stell, Herschel Walsh, Sandra Martin, Steven Ivey and Becky and Vern Marlin. It is hoped that they and Mary Taft, Ricky Enzor, Steven Graham, Leretto Worthen, Robert Young, Doug McRae Jr., Bob King and Kemp Shuping will be available when a new date has been selected.

Located on the SCC campus, the center is a place for adult, female students to gather between classes to study, visit, wait or read. Student counselors are also available for those who seek their services.

Each Wednesday at 12:20 p.m. special programs are presented in the center. The programs deal with topics of interest to women, featuring speakers, slide tape presentations and discussion groups. Suggestions for programs are welcome.

Women visiting the center stress the importance of having a place to gather. So often non-traditional students feel left out or out of place in a regular college setting. Many feel that having a place to meet and talk to each other about their goals and interest gives them encouragement.

Finding approval and support for continuing education is extremely valuable to a student who has been out of school for a period of time.

Those working with the center welcome women of the college and the community to visit the Women's Center. For further information call the college, 642-7141.

Local Teacher Co-Authors Book

Orren Pickard of Whiteville is a co-author of Elementary Technical Mathematics, a textbook published in second edition by Wadsworth Publishing Company of Belmont, California. Pickard, former chairman of the mathematics and science division of Rantoul High School, Rantoul, Illinois, is currently tutoring for Southeastern Community College's Resources for Student Learning Program.

"The text is designed for the student in a technical or trade program: the student who has a minimal mathematics background but wants to learn a technical skill," Pickard said. "The reading level of the text and the use of visual images make the book especially appropriate for technical students. The exercises for student practice are applications of the fundamentals of technology rather than pure mathematics." He added that, "The text can be used effectively in the traditional classroom setting or on an individual study basis. The materials do not require a great deal of explanation from the instructor."

Pickard, who also co-authored Mathematics for Career Education, came to Southeastern Community College through the Retired Senior Volunteer Program. "Orren relates well with students," said Winnie Cooke, Director of RSL. "We are impressed with his credentials and with the results of his work in our tutor laboratory."

Prior to teaching math in Illinois, the Tennessee native spent 22 years as a farmer in Arkansas and Missouri. Several years ago, he and his wife, Sarah, began spending summers in western North Carolina. About seven years ago, they decided to try living near the coast during the winter. While traveling through Whiteville, they stopped, and they stayed.

"Those of us who work with Orren at Southeastern are glad he came our way," Ms. Cooke commented. "He is contributing much to our community and our college."

State's community colleges offer desegregation plan

Wilmington Morning Star March 3 1978

Associated Press

RALEIGH — An effort to renogiate several provisions of a federally-approved desegregation plan which have irked officials of North Carolina's community college system has been proposed by a committee of the state Board of Education.

The committee acted after receiving strongly worded letters and mail-grams from dissatisfied community college faculty members and trustees who urged the board to rescind their previous approval of the plan.

After it consulted with a representative of the state attorney general's office, the committee directed R.W. Manz of Roanoke Rapids, chairman, to name a subcommittee to hear complaints of the community colleges and draw up a list of points to be discussed with the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

On Feb. 2, HEW Secretary Joseph Califano, approved the desegregation plan for the 57-institution community college system. At the same time, Califano rejected the plan submitted by the 16-campus University of North Carolina system.

Objections were heard from Rockingham Community College in Wentworth, Central Piedmont Community College in Charlotte, and Southeastern Community College in Whiteville. In addition, John Tart, a board member and president of Johnston Technical Institute in Smithfield, said he had heard from about 40 institutions.

Their objections were centered on four major areas:

— Requirement of a desegregation plan for a system that has never practiced segregation.

— A pledge by the community college system to check with the five predominantly black institutions in the UNC system before changing curriculum or beginning new programs.

— Implementation of an earlier deadline (June 1) to submit a campus affirmative action plan.

Welsford Bishopric, chairman of Rockingham Community College's trustees, said the desegregation plan appeared not to be aimed at elimination of racial duality in the community college system but rather a plan for helping the university system solve its problems.

"We find the ideas of providing chancellors of the five predominantly black universities an opportunity to sign off on proposed program changes of any community college unacceptable," he said.

Richard F. Burkhardt, faculty senate president at Southeastern Community College, said "the ability to serve and meet local needs will be greatly hindered by the loss of control over our own curriculum."

Asked whether the board could legally rescind its approval of the desegregation plan, Deputy Attorney General Andrew Vanore said he had "serious reservations." He said the board and HEW had entered inta contract and that rescinding the plan could be viewed by HEW as cause to initiate administrative proceedings against the system.

"We reacted under pressure," said Larry Harding of Charlotte, a board member. "There's no point in disguising that fact. But somewhere along the line, we're going to have to draw the line. This system, unlike the public schools or the higher institutions has never been segregated. I agree we've been bad on some points, but, by God, we ought to do it (correct deficiencies), not HEW."

College Asks $1 Million For LRC From Commission

By SHERRY WILLIAMSON

The Trustees of Southeastern Community College submitted a proposal asking for matching funds of approximately $1 million to the Columbus County Board of Commissioners for a Learning Resource Center. The state has already allotted $500,000 for the project.

Dr. Ronald McCarter, president of SCC, said the college needs $450,000 now, just to match the state's $500,000. The remainder would be given over the next three years. "The $450,000 necessary to match, combined with the state's $500,000, is not an adequate amount for the center because it will eventually have to be expanded to meet the rising services of the students and community," said McCarter.

In assessing the need for the library, McCarter said, "The present library, planned for 7,000 books, now houses 35,000, which is 43 per cent short of storage by national standards."

The cost of the proposed center is approximately $1.5 million for 40,000 square feet.

"Matching funds of $1 million can be spread out over the next three years, coinciding with construction, providing the commissioners certify and commit their intentions," said McCarter at the SCC hosted dinner Thursday night.

Southeastern will be working toward its third accreditation from the Southern Association during the next three years, which will be finalized in 1982.

The library, ranking lowest in the system for the amount of space assigned to house books, adds at least 1,500 volumes per year.

"The plan for meeting other space needs for developmental skills, fine arts, student services and business management depends upon the space to be vacated by the present library. With a new center no additional buildings at Southeastern are foreseen," said McCarter.

Citing community support for the proposed center, McCarter added that "40 per cent of the present library use is by community patrons not enrolled at SCC."

Commissioner David McPherson asked about "the possibility of also looking into another direction for grant money such as the Cape Fear Council of Governments, since the center would serve both the students and public."

McCarter replied that "federal fund inputs have been scarce in recent years for construction purposes, but the suggestion will be looked into."

The commissioners said that they would consider the request for the funds over the next 18 months and would discuss other methods of raising the matching funds.

State's Community Colleges Would Renegotiate Desegregation Plan

The Robesonian March 3 1978

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina's community college system, which unlike the state university system has agreed with the federal government on a desegregation plan, now says it doesn't like like the plan and wants to renegotiate at least some of it.

A committee of the state Board of Education has proposed that an effort be made to reopen talks with federal officials on the plan.

The committee acted after receiving strongly worded letters and mail-grams from disatisfied community college faculty members and trustees who urged the board to rescind their previous approval of the plan.

After it consulted with a representative of the state attorney general's office, the committee directed R.W. Court: SCC must reconsider deaf nursing applicant

From Staff and Wire Reports

Wilmington Morning Star 4-20-78

WHITEVILLE — Citing new federal regulations in favor of handicapped college applicants, a federal appeals court in Richmond, Va. has ruled that Southeastern Community College must reconsider the nursing school application of a deaf woman who was denied admission.

The U.S. Fourth District Court of Appeals issued the ruling last month in the case of Frances B. Davis of Fairmont, a licensed practical nurse who sought to enroll in courses leading to certification as a registered nurse.

She was turned down because of her hearing disability, and U.S. District Court Judge Robert Hemphill of Fayetteville ruled last year that the refusal could stand because she was "not otherwise qualified" for admission.

But the appeals court sent the case back to the lower court, ruling the lower court erred in its findings and citing new U.S. Di/me t of Health, Education and Welfare regulations adopted after the district court decision.

The new regulations placed a greater emphasis on academic and technical qualifications of handicapped persons.

The appeals court noted that because of Ms. Davis' demonstrated lip-reading ability, "there does appear to be a number of settings in which the plaintiff could perform satisfactorily as an RN, such as in industry or perhaps a physician's office."

The court also said if she meets all other criteria for admission, "it should not be foreclosed to her simply because she may not be able to function effectively in all those roles which registered nurses may choose for their careers."

In remanding the case, the appeals court suggested the district court give close attention to HEW "affirmative relief" regulations which urge a college to modify its requirements so they don't have the effect of unduly discriminating against qualified handicapped applicants or students.

"We have just been granted an extension until May 2 to file a petition for a rehearing," said Ed Williamson, attorney for Southeastern Community College. "I haven't developed the petition substantially and I'm not ready to elaborate on it right now," Williamson added.

"It is a long, drawn out, complicated situation," said Dr. Ron McCarter, president of the College. "It has been in litigation since 1974 and we expect it to be going on four years from now, too."

He said the hearing had been requested "in order to get the ruling clarified for us.

"We have students with various handicaps enrolled in the colleges in most of our curricula and that is no problem at all. It did cause a problem in the nursing program where students are required to work with patients in the clinic setting," McCarter said.

Country Colleges Subject Of Paper

July 26, 1978

Columbus County News

Dr. W. Ronald McCarter, president of Southeastern Community College, will present a paper and lead a discussion on "Organizing and Managing the Rural Community College" at Virginia Polytechnical Institute and State University, Blacksburg, Va. The special conference on the rural community college will be sponsored by the Education Department of VPISU and the American Association of Community and Junior Colleges.

"This is the first national conference on the unique problems of the small, rural community college," explains Dr. McCarter. "Our type of college has special problems in curriculum planning, staffing, financing, recruitment, etc., and national conferences do not always address the problems in a meaningful way for smaller colleges. But, this conference is intended to do that."

Southeastern Community College has gained national recognition in areas of curriculum development, individualized instruction, developmental instruction, professional staff development and other areas.

College, Schools Have Joint Meet On Communications

"We never know what surprises will be in store for us at Southeastern Community College when we attend the informal communications dinner," remarked Mrs. Iris Baker, counselor at Tabor City High School.

Mrs. Baker was referring to the annual dinner meeting which was attended by approximately 30 superintendents, principals and counselors from the city and county high schools of Columbus, Bladen, Brunswick, New Hanover, Horry, Pender and Robeson counties. The meeting was held in the Nursing Building on the Southeastern Community College campus and was coordinated by Sue Hawks, recruitment coordinator, at Southeastern. The purpose of the meeting is to keep lines of communication open between the two educational institutions and to ensure the high school personnel of up-to-date college information and literature.

The program began with Deans Lonnie Fox, occupational education; Dick Paulsen, college transfer; Bill Wilson, adult education; Dan Moore, student Development and Walter Brown, dean of instruction bringing the guests up to date on new programs, policies and personnel at SCC. Dr. Ron McCarter, SCC President, gave an enrollment report for the 1978-79 school year as of fall quarter.

The group enjoyed a bus tour of new campus facilities, including additional parking areas, the tennis courts, ball field and firing range. The bus came to a halt at the firing range where information by Marshall Shepherd concerning the Criminal Justice program was imparted to the group. A firearms demonstration followed by students of the program.

Continuous efforts throughout the county for educational articulation have become a commitment of the Southeastern Community College personnel. A realization of success becomes evident through the rapport developed at the informal communications dinner and other similar activities during the year.

Legislators See New Library As College's Greatest Need

News Reporter April 3 1978

By WRAY THOMPSON

The mission was simple — to show area legislators what's going on at Southeastern Community College, how the money they took part in appropriating is being used, and the needs that exist.

The time was Thursday afternoon. The beginning point was the faculty lounge where President Ron McCarter, members of the faculty and staff, and students leaders met Rep. and Mrs. Edd Nye, Rep. Ron Taylor and other guests.

Early in the tour participants were amazed at the small number of students in the classes they visited. Although the classrooms seemed to have seating to accommodate 25-30 students, they had attending seven and nine in two rooms, and only two students in the zoology lab. But the small classes, it was pointed out, is beneficial for students because they receive more personal attention from instructors.

Dr. McCarter later explained that Tuesday and Thursday afternoons are usually the quietest on the campus, because the greatest attendance is on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. "We have to schedule classes to fit the lives of students," the president explained, noting that many of them have full-time or part-time jobs.

The legislators were in agreement after visiting the library that a larger facility must be built. "They's bursting at the seams." (Construction is dated in 1980.)

Richard Wright, director of the media center, revealed that among the state's community colleges, Southeastern's library ranked third largest in number of books, yet was the lowest in shelving space. Books are stacked on top of other books, and the library has been giving away thousands of dollars worth of periodicals in recent years because it does not have room to shelve them if they were to be bound as is the custom.

Following the tour of the campus, the legislators were polled on things they had observed that most impressed them from 2:30 until 6 when they were served buffet dinner provided by the secretarial group, maintenance group, faculty and staff.

Taylor, Nye and Wright concurred that the most obvious and immediate need is a larger media center. Each of them cited the remedial program as one of the programs with which they were most impressed.

Taylor said his overall observations will make him better able to argue in behalf of community colleges and technical institutes during the May session of the General Assembly. This year's cut in funding has had a drastic effect on the local college.

Wright explained that the community colleges and technical institutions would have fared all right had the funding remained at the level recommended by the full appropriations committee, but when the budget exited from the "super-subcommittee" which made final recommendations for the 1978-79 budget, the institutions has been the victims of several cutting (approximately $12 million).

Rep. Nye feels that there has been partiality shown between funding of institutions of the Greater University of North Carolina and the community colleges-technical institues. An example, he said, that the university receives $8,000 for each FTE (full-time equivalent student) whereus the community colleges-technical institutions are allotted only $1,200 for each. Another discrepancy is that the university receives its FTE funding as soon as the enrollment period ends, whereas community colleges are paid for FTEs at the conclusion of the quarter, with the loss of the funds that would have been due from drop-outs had the money been availed at the end of the enrollment period.

Rep. Wright gave alcolades to the faculty and staff for their evident interest and intelligence. Taylor, too, feels that southeastern has a collection of educators that the area should be proud of, but he is displeased that they are paid through a separate system from that which provides funds for the salaries of other state employees, including teachers. "Last year the other state employees got a 6½ per cent increase; the state employees at Southeastern were not so lucky. This is an inequity that should be corrected," Nye thinks.

On the brighter side, Rep. Wright considers the physical appearance and layout of the campus as "really coming along." He was especially impressed by the zoology laboratory. "It is just as good as any of the ones you'll find in Chapel Hill," he said, recalling that the students were dissecting a shark when the tour group visited them.

"I was also impressed with the students who accompanied us," Wright declared. "They were knowledgeable, polite and ready to answer all of our questions."

It was also good news to hear members of the Nursing Department staff report that their graduates are so much in demand that hospitals have been caling wanting to know when they would be available for work.

The group was reminded, though, that within two years after graduating from the Southeastern credit program, many of the graduates begin earning higher salaries than their former Southeastern instructors.

All of the legislative group gave high commendation to the college for the remedial program for reading, language and math deficiencies. "It's a pity that so many of the students have gone through 12 years of school, yet when they first appear on campus, some 75 per cent of them rank in the lower 25 per cent of the national level in reading, language and math skills," Wright stated.

A fact sheet illustrated the value of the reading courses. Of the 206 enrollees of the Developmental Reading Course in the fall and winter quarters, 10 scored below the fifth grade level upon entry, with 39 receiving the highest score. By the end of the quarter 164 passed, meaning that 80 per cent were successful.

Rep. Nye termed the remedial program as "fantastic!" I didn't realize they would take the kids back to the starting point and so successfully bring them up to the higher level of competency."

The buffet dinner gave the legislators the opportunity to meet with all faculty and staff members. The tastiness of the food was praised, with Rep. Ron Taylor commenting, "It was refreshing to have such a delightful meal and companionship after a month and a half of politicking and eating barbecue."

The final event of the Legislative Day, which may become an annual affair, was attendance of the performance of the Atlanta Ballet which was loudly applauded by an overflow crowd.

"Our overall intent was to give our legislators an entertaining and informative afternoon and evening," declared Dr. McCarter, "and I believe we succeeeded."

Deaf Nursing Applicant Wins Appeals Decision, College Asks Rehearing

Columbus County News 4-26-78

The case of a deaf Fairmont woman who was refused admission to the nursing curriculum at Southeastern Community College has been remanded by an appellant court in Richmond to the U.S. Eastern District Court.

The plaintiff is Frances B. Davis who is certified as a licensed practical nurse and has attempted to gain admission to Southeastern to take courses that would make her eligible for a registered nurse's (R.N.) certification.

Last year U.S. District Court Judge Robert Hemphill of Fayetteville ruled that the college's refusal could stand because Ms. Davis was "not otherwise qualified" for admission.

But the U.S. Fourth District Court of Appeals said that in light of new federal regulations favoring the bending of rules of admission of handicapped students to colleges should cause Southeastern to reconsider the application of the plaintiff to the nursing program.

The appellant court referred to Department of Health, Education and Welfare regulations that were adopted after the district court ruling.

Ms. Davis has lip reading ability, the court of appeals noted, therefore "there should be a number of settings in which the plaintiff could perform satisfactorily as a R.N., such as an industry or physician's office." The court also said if she meets other criteria for admission, "it should not be foreclosed to her simply because she might not be able to function affectively in all of those roles which registered nurses may choose for their cases.

The court of appeals cautioned the lower court to give close attention to HEW "affirmative relief" regulations which urge a college to modify its requirements so they don't effect unduly discriminate against qualified handicapped applicants or students.

Dr. Ron McCarter, president of Southeastern, said Ms. Davis applied for admission to the advanced nursing program in the spring of 1974. Based partly on an audiology report which confirmed the severity of her hearing problem, the committee denied her admission in the summer of 1974. The case has been in litigation ever since.

Need College Library Badly

Columbus County News Apr. 15 1978

By WRAY THOMPSON

The mission was simple — to show area legislators what's going on at Southeastern Community College, how the money they took part in appropriating is being used, and the needs that exist.

The time was Thursday afternoon. The beginning point was the faculty lounge where President Ron McCarter, members of the faculty and staff, and students leaders met Rep. and Mrs. Edd Nye, Rep. Ron Taylor and other guests.

Early in the tour participants were amazed at the small number of students in the classes they visited. Although the classrooms seemed to have seating to accommodate 25-30 students, they had attending seven and nine in two rooms, and only two students in the zoology lab. But the small classes, it was pointed out, is beneficial for students because they receive more personal attention from instructors.

Dr. McCarter later explained that Tuesday and Thursday afternoons are usually the quietest on the campus, because the greatest attendance is on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. "We have to schedule classes to fit the lives of students," the president explained, noting that many of them have full-time or part-time jobs.

The legislators were in agreement after visiting the library that a larger facility must be built. "They's bursting at the seams." (Construction is dated in 1980.)

Richard Ward, director of the media center, revealed that among the state's community colleges, Southeastern's library ranked third largest in number of books, yet was the lowest in shelving space. Books are stacked on top of other books, and the library has been giving away thousands of dollars worth of periodicals in recent years because it does not have room to shelve them if they were to be bound as is the custom.

Following the tour of the campus, the legislators were polled on things they had observed that most impressed them from 2:30 until 6 when they were served buffet dinner provided by the secretarial group, maintenance group, faculty and staff.

Taylor, Nye and Wright concurred that the most obvious and immediate need is a larger media center. Each of them cited the remedial program as one of the programs with which they were most impressed.

Taylor said his overall observations will make him better able to argue in behalf of community colleges and technical institutes during the May session of the General Assembly. This year's cut in funding has had a drastic effect on the local college.

Wright explained that the community colleges and technical institutions would have fared all right had the funding remained at the level recommended by the full appropriations committee, but when the budget exited from the "super-subcommittee" which made final recommendations for the 1978-79 budget, the institutions has been the victims of several cutting (approximately $12 million).

Rep. Nye feels that there has been partiality shown between funding of institutions of the Greater University of North Carolina and the community colleges-technical institues. An example, he said, that the university receives $8,000 for each FTE (full-time equivalent student) whereus the community colleges-technical institutions are allotted ~~only~~ $1,200 for each. Another discrepancy is that the university receives its FTE funding as soon as the enrollment period ends, whereas community colleges are paid for FTEs at the conclusion of the quarter, with the loss of the funds that would have been due from drop-outs had the money been availed at the end of the enrollment period.

Rep. Wright gave alcolades to the faculty and staff for their evident interest and intelligence. Taylor, too, feels that southeastern has a collection of educators that the area should be proud of, but he is displeased that they are paid through a separate system from that which provides funds for the salaries of other state employees, including teachers. "Last year the other state employees got a 6½ per cent increase; the state employees at Southeastern were not so lucky. This is an inequity that should be corrected," Nye thinks.

On the brighter side, Rep. Wright considers the physical appearance and layout of the campus as "really coming along." He was especially impressed by the zoology laboratory. "It is just as good as any of the ones you'll find in Chapel Hill," he said, recalling that the students were dissecting a shark when the tour group visited them.

"I was also impressed with the students who accompanied us," Wright declared. "They were knowledgeable, polite and ready to answer all of our questions."

It was also good news to hear members of the Nursing Department staff report that their graduates are so much in demand that hospitals have been caling wanting to know when they would be available for work.

The group was reminded, though, that within two years after graduating from the Southeastern credit program, many of the graduates begin earning higher salaries than their former Southeastern instructors.

All of the legislative group gave high commendation to the college for the remedial program for reading, language and math deficiencies. "It's a pity that so many of the students have gone through 12 years of school, yet when they first appear on campus, some 75 per cent of them rank in the lower 25 per cent of the national level in reading, language and math skills," Wright stated.

A fact sheet illustrated the value of the reading courses. Of the 206 enrollees of the Developmental Reading Course in the fall and winter quarters, 10 scored below the fifth grade level upon entry, with 39 receiving the highest score. By the end of the quarter 164 passed, meaning that 80 per cent were successful.

Rep. Nye termed the remedial program as "fantastic!" I didn't realize they would take the kids back to the starting point and so successfully bring them up to the higher level of competency."

The buffet dinner gave the legislators the opportunity to meet with all faculty and staff members. The tastiness of the food was praised, with Rep. Ron Taylor commenting, "It was refreshing to have such a delightful meal and companionship after a month and a half of politicking and eating barbecue."

The final event of the Legislative Day, which may become an annual affair, was attendance of the performance of the Atlanta Ballet which was loudly applauded by an overflow crowd.

"Our overall intent was to give our legislators an entertaining and informative afternoon and evening," declared Dr. McCarter, "and I believe we succeeeded."

Columbus Case Goes To Court

WHITEVILLE — Southeastern Community College has petitioned the United States Supreme Court to hear a case in which the school was ordered by a lower court to admit Mrs. Frances B. Davis of Fairmont, who was originally denied admission to the associate degree nursing program because she has a hearing impediment.

The nation's highest court is expected to accept or deny the petition within the next two or three weeks.

The case began when Mrs. Davis, who earned her licensed practical nursing degree from Robeson Technical Institute, applied to Southeastern for the 1975-1976 term to pursue a registered nursing degree. Over 100 applicants applied for the 40 positions available.

Mrs. Davis was reportedly told she was denied admission to the program because she has a hearing problem. She then filed a suit in Fayetteville in the eastern district federal court of North Carolina, charging that she was deprived of her constitutional rights, particularly the equal protection under the law specified in the 14th amendment.

In the initial court hearing, the defense asserted that the case did not come under federal jurisdiction because the college's administrative procedures were applied uniformly, and also argued that the matter of a college education is a privilege rather than a constitutional right.

In regard to the plaintiff, the college further asserted that her hearing impairment is so severe as to make her unable to participate in the clinical portion of the program or to engage in a safe nursing practice.

The defense introduced as evidence reports of audiological examinations Mrs. Davis underwent at Duke University and cited an opinion from the N.C. Board of Nursing, reportedly based on the examination reports, that she would be unable to function in the nursing program.

In his findings from the hearing in Fayetteville, Judge Robert Hemphell concluded that admission to a state-supported community college is a privilege instead of a right and said he found that the school had not discriminated against Mrs. Davis.

The denial for admission was upheld.

Mrs. Davis appealed the case to the Fourth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Richmond, Va., where arguments were made Jan. 9, 1978.

In the decision handed down, none of the constitutional questions brought up were dealt with, but the federal appellate court ruled that Judge Hemphell has erred in his findings.

Contrary to Hemphell's findings, the bench in Richmond decided that a private right of action does not apply under the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 and that a person cannot be denied admission by reason of handicap alone.

Lawyers for Southeastern Community College then filed their first petition for a rehearing, the document being filed with the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals. Southeastern was joined in the action by the commonwealths of Kentucky, Pennsylvania and Virginia and the states of Connecticut, Delaware, Maryland, Mississippi, Missouri, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee and West Virginia, each of which filed briefs in support of the rehearing.

By a split decision of the court on June 29, the petition for a rehearing was denied.

SCC fights ruling on deaf applicant

By Susan Reeves

WHITEVILLE — Southeastern Community College has filed a petition for rehearing in the case of a deaf woman who was denied admission to the nursing school, challenging the ruling of a federal appeals court in Richmond, Va.

Citing new federal Department of Health, Education and Welfare regulations which emphasize the technical and academic qualifications of handicapped persons, the U.S. Fourth District Court of Appeals ruled in March that the college must reconsider the application of Frances B. Davis of Fairmont.

Ms. Davis, a licensed practical nurse, attempted to enroll in courses leading to certification as a registered nurse in 1974, but was turned down because of her hearing disability.

Wilmington Star-News 5-2-78

Last year, U.S. District Court Judge Robert Hemphill of Fayetteville ruled the college's refusal could stand, because Ms. Davis "was not otherwise qualified for admission."

The appeals court noted that because of Ms. Davis' demonstrated lip-reading ability, she could perform satisfactorily as an RN in certain types of work.

The petition for rehearing, filed Monday in the Richmond appeals court by SCC Attorney Edward L. Williamson, argues that it is difficult to separate 'academic' and 'technical' standards from the disability in question.

The petition states, "If the nature of the handicap prevents the applicant from meeting the academic and technical standards, then section 504 (of HEW regulations) is not intended to prevent exclusion from the program, because the applicant is not being excluded solely because he is handicapped, but because he can't satisfy the necessary standards."

The court may allow a rehearing with or without oral arguments and the resubmitting of briefs, or the request may be denied, Williamson said.

Williamson said if the petition for rehearing is denied, SCC may either have a rehearing through the U.S. District Court or may petition the U.S. Supreme Court to hear the case.

Noting that the case involves interpretation of new federal regulations, Williamson said it is important the final decision sets the correct precedent.

"The courts will be looking for a precedent here, and if the Fourth Circuit decision remains, that will be the precedent for others," Williamson said. "This decision will be applied to colleges and universities in the future, so we don't want the application to be improper or detrimental."

Williamson said he thought the U.S. Supreme Court would be interested in the case. "The court likes to deal with novel areas of the law and they might be interested in reviewing a case like this," he said.

Williamson said it could take the court of appeals up to two months to hand down a decision on the request for rehearing.

Area Legislators Recently At SCC

APRIL 26 1978

Area Legislators were recently on campus at Southeastern Community College. They were invited to the College to learn first hand what a typical day on campus is like, and what the assets and needs of the college are.

A tour of the campus was provided by members of the college staff and students. Representatives were able to enter class rooms and labs during class time. The quality of SCC teaching staff and

Representatives Taylor and Nye were very complimentry of the remedial program offered to students needing this service.

After the tour of the campus the legislators were treated to a buffet dinner provided by the faculty and staff. The dinner was informal and afforded an opportunity for SCC staff and their spouses to visit and get acquainted with the representatives.

Legislative Day at SCC was highlighted by a performance by the Atlanta Ballet. The troupe played to a full house.

Faculty, staff and students were very pleased with Legislative Day and anticipate its becoming a yearly event.

Dr. Ronald McCarter, President of Southeastern Community College, said, "The purpose of this day is to be informative and have a good time, and we certainly did that."

SCC Gets More Funds;

News Reporter June 29, 1978

Loses LR Head, Librarian

By THOM H. BILLINGTON

Southeastern Community College, in addition to losing local matching funds this year for its proposed $1.6 million Learning Resources Center (LRC), has lost its Director of Learning Resources, Dick Ward.

Ward, who left private business to join the college, has resigned to return to the real estate business at Wilmington. The college's librarian, Mrs. Becky Marlin, also has resigned. Ward's duties will be taken over by Dean of Instruction Walter Brown.

While Southeastern President Ron McCarter did not comment on Mrs. Marlin's resignation, he pointed out that applications for her successor were taken until June 23 and a screening committee will recommend a replacement by Aug. 1.

Although the state's General Assembly, in the just-ended mini-session, revised the state Advisory Budget Commission's recommendations for community college funding for the coming year, the college is still on tenterhooks with the LRC funds.

"We have a commitment of $500,000 in state funds, but we need $1.1 million in local matching funds within the next 18 months or we'll lose the $500,000," McCarter said. The college administration had proposed that the Columbus County Board of Commissioners match the money by granting one-third of the $1.1 million each year for the next three years.

Dr. Ron McCarter

However, faced with rising operating costs by all agencies and no appreciable increase in revenues, the county board was unable to meet the college's request.

McCarter said he was pleased "and most grateful to the General Assembly" for their relaxing of the state purse strings with regard to community colleges.

The statewide system's first priority was to reduce, through an additonal $4,740,083, the instructor - to - student ratio from its present one-to-23 to one-to-21. The legislature compromised by providing enough funds to reduce the ratio to one-to-22. "The ratio is still too high, particulaly in our programs such as nursing," the college president pointed out.

The community college system across the state was given an increase to offset costs of operations in a total amount of $540,156, less than one-third of the amount requested. Although the ABC did not recommend more funds for equipment and library books, the mini-session legislators wrote in some funds. Southeastern will receive $29,855 in this category.

McCarter pointed out that funds will be available to train employees of new industries, if they are needed, but funding for new programs and staff development failed to pass the legislature.

Also bypassed were additional funding for special programs and affirmative action program with the state board and U.S. Health, Education and Welfare, but the lack of funding to implement the program means the college will not have an affirmative action officer. If such a position is required, it means slicing into the operating budget. That budget is the same source of substitute teachers' pay, since the state has not granted the community colleges any funding for sick leave.

One windfall in the budget passed by the General Assembly is additional funding for vocational education. Southeastern will receive an additional $26,928 for this purpose.

"This is a good funding year, compared to the last three years," McCarter told The News Reporter. "There are still some things to be accomplished and there are still some problems, but we are most grateful to the General Assembly."

Among the funding recommended for community colleges is a 6 per cent pay increase, the same granted to other state employees.

Cheers Is Appointed SECC Coordinator For Brunswick

Gary Cheers of Shallotte has recently been appointed as the coordinator for Southeastern Community College extension programs in Brunswick County. Officially starting his position on October 12, 1978, Cheers has already developed five goals for this extension program which will be offered in three different locations in Brunswick County. "I have developed five immediate goals for the extension program system," states Cheers. "The goals are to increase enrollment, to expand the range of course offerings, to insure that students are able to take the courses they need to graduate with the least amount of conflict, to advise students toward a meaningful college education, and to enhance the role of Southeastern Community College in Brunswick County as well as to impress upon the citizens the value of these services."

Mr. Cheers graduated from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill in 1968 with a B.A. in Psychology and from the University of Florida in Gainesville in 1975 with an M.A.T. in Clinical Psychology. Cheers has also received various hours of credit from UNC—Wilmington, East Carolina University and Southeastern Community College. In addition to his education, Cheers taught psychology at Southeastern Community College for seven consecutive terms and served as an instructor for Cape Fear Technical Institute in High School Equivalency for two terms. He has also taught in various elementary, junior high and high schools including teaching French at Shallotte High School (1971-1972) and teaching sixth grade and serving as a counselor at Leland Middle School (1972-1973). He is presently a Learning Disabilities teacher at Union Primary School in addition to his duties as Brunswick County Coordinator.

Cheers has served on various service and educational committees including serving as vice-president and president of the Brunswick County Unit of the North Carolina Association of Educators, as vice-president of the Brunswick County Mental Health Association, chairman of Special Education at Union Primary School, as coordinator of testing for state and local testing at Union Primary School, and as a member of the Instructional Materials Committee at Union Primary School.

"We are pleased to obtain a highly qualified native of Brunswick County for this assignment," explains Dr. W. Ronald McCarter, President of SCC. "Mr. Cheers, with the aid of a temporary assignment of Mrs. Irene Stanley also of Brunswick County, plans to continue and broaden services to Brunswick County citizens. Mr. Cheers and Mrs. Stanley will be eager to deliver a comprehensive college transfer educational service to citizens of any age, for credit or audit, at a very low cost," Dr. McCarter added.

SCC faces precedent setting suit

Dec 7, 1978

Wilmington Morning Star

WHITEVILLE — A lawsuit claiming discrimination against the handicapped filed against Southeastern Community College will be the first such case to be reviewed by the U.S. Supreme Court.

Frances Davis of Fair Bluff applied to the college's nursing program in 1976, but was denied admission based on a hearing disability. Admission officials contended the hearing impairment would keep her from safely participating in required clinical training and would restrict her performance as a registered nurse.

However, since the nursing program receives federal funding, SCC is subject to Section 504 of the 1973 Rehabilitation Act, which bars discrimination against the handicapped.

Ms. Davis took the case to court. After a series of hearings in lower courts, the decision in favor of Ms. Davis was appealed to the Fourth U.S. Circuit Court of appeals last March.

The appeals court remanded the case to federal district court to determine if Ms. Davis met the "academic and technical standards of admission."

After the appeals court denied SCC a rehearing in June, the college appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court without waiting for a new district court trial.

"There are many technical and constitutional questions raised in this case," noted SCC attorney Edward L. Williamson. "Other colleges are going through the same suit, but SCC's case will set a precedent."

In its brief to the Supreme Court, the college argues: "There is not a word in Section 504 or in its legislative history that permits or contemplates an independent private action by the handicapped person prior to any kind of administrative action by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

The college stated that the Fourth Circuit appeals court had interpreted Section 504 so that no physical handicap could be considered a disqualification for admission to any federally financed training program for a profession or trade requiring total and effective use of human physical skill.

In its request for a review, the college contends that the decision, if left unreviewed, can have a devastating and lasting impact upon the federal antidiscrimination policy, to say nothing on the astronomical costs, risks and potential dangers to health and safety.

The brief maintains that under the appeals court's literal reading of the statute, a blind person possessing all the qualifications for driving a bus except sight could be said to "otherwise qualify" for the job of driving.

The American Council on Education and 27 states have indicated their support of the college's request for a Supreme Court review.

Fund trend threatens SCC quality, official says

Wilmington Morning Star
May 17, 1978

By Susan Reeves
Staff Writer

WHITEVILLE — If state funding trends for community colleges are not reversed this year the quality of Southeastern Community College may suffer, according to President Dr. Ronald McCarter.

Under North Carolina law the state supplies all instructional funds to community colleges. But last year the state legislature cut the college's budget $150,000 when an increase was needed, McCarter said.

The board of trustees has predicted instructional needs totaling $2.4 million for 1978-79, a $384,000 increase over last year.

McCarter isn't sure the college will get that much money, but he's convinced the need is there.

"If this funding trend continues we'll lose our ability to attract new personnel, and we may have trouble retaining some of the people we have now," McCarter said.

He said the state's 57 community colleges will make a final funding plea to North Carolina legislators in Raleigh this week at the annual meeting of the the North Carolina Trustees Association. Some 300 persons, including members of boards of trustees of all the colleges and the college presidents, will discuss funding needs while the trustees study college and state policies.

McCarter said he expects that state Sen. R.C. Soles Jr. of Tabor City and state Reps. Ron Taylor of Duplin, Edd Nye of Elizabethtown and Richard Wright of Tabor City will attend part of the meeting.

"Last year the North Carolina legislators told us they didn't realize what had happened," McCarter said. "They have convinced us that won't happen again."

McCarter said the year has been "tough, but I think we have done a creditable job in spite of the fact that our resources have been cut."

The college has absorbed the funding loss by increasing class size, a trend McCarter says cannot continue.

"Many of our classes, such as nursing classes and different types of shop classes, require a small student-teacher ratio. If we have too many nursing students learning techniques we run into the danger of violating state nursing laws. It's sort of a Catch-22," McCarter said.

He said no one has been fired because of the budget restrictions, but the salary burden has been eased through several resignations.

"Four faculty members and two administrators resigned and we just divided their work load among the remaining staff," McCarter explained.

He said the $2.4 million budget accounts only for instructional materials, travel and support staff — not salary increases. A statewide salary increase of 6 percent is expected for state employees.

McCarter noted the North Carolina community colleges have gotten into a "non-competitive situation," ranking 47th in teacher's salaries for community colleges nationwide.

The funding scheme for the college is based on a ratio of 23 students to one faculty member, McCarter said. It used to be 22 to one. "When they changed it, it cost us 5 percent."

"If we could get the ratio changed back we would get another $71,000," he said.

"We need about $400,000 plus money for raises and growth money," McCarter said.

Growth money, he explained, is used to develop new programs. "Three years ago we were getting $30,000 a year for developing new programs. Now there is nothing."

But McCarter says he is optimistic about receiving more funds this year.

"We've gotten the attention of the the North Carolina General Assembly. We feel we've made our contributions to recession and to balancing the budget."

SCC Hosting State Artists Exhibition

News Reporter 11-13-78

A sampling of some of the best work being produced by contemporary North Carolina artists will be on display in the lobby of the Administration Building at SCC until November 24, 1978.

The exhibition is a selection of 18 works from the 40th annual North Carolina Artists Exhibition (NCAE), which was on view from December 1, 1977, through January 8, 1978, at the N.C. Museum of Art in Raleigh.

The exhibition comes to Southeastern Community College as part of an 11-city tour scheduled through the end of 1978.

The works for both circulating exhibitions were selected by the same panel that juried the NCAE, selecting 107 works for the show from 964 entries: Robert T. Buck, Jr., Director of the Albright-Knox Art Gallery, Buffalo, New York; Dorothy Miller, formerly Curator of Painting and Sculpture, the Museum of Modern Art, New York now a free-lance consultant; and Paul J. Smith, Director of the Museum of Contemporary Crafts, New York.

Artists represented in "North Carolina Artists Exhibition, Part II" are: C.L. Adamec and Jacques Menache of Chapel Hill; George H. Britt II, Michael William Ehlbeck, Benjamin H. Jenkins and Aaron Karp of Greenville; Ann Connor of Wilmington; Dennis B. Davis of Alexandria, Virginia; Richard Fennell of Whitsett; Beverly Covington Harkins of Pikeville; Arch Johnson, Ronald G. Kovacs and Michelle Minah of Durham; James McManus of Cullowhee; Gordon Mahy of Mars Hill; Roney Meisner of Asheville; Peter Ray of Penland; and Russell A. Riggsbee of Hillsborough.

School, College Build Playground

News Reporter MAY 25, 1978

After two years of cooperative work, the primary grade teachers and patrons of Old Dock School and the outdoor recreation classes of Southeastern Community College have built a playground.

While there is still a little finishing work to be done, most of the playground is ready for use at its location next to Old Dock School.

The playground was designed especially for the primary students at the school, kindergarten through third grade, and the equipment was built on a reduced scale with the smaller K-3 children in mind.

The playground includes three picnic tables, two benches, two pyramids connected by a balance beam, a tire swing complex, a climbing net, an obstacle wall, a cable walk, a horizontal ladder, and a tunneled sand mound.

The playground will sit where the principal's house stood just two years ago when the project began in March of 1977.

What happened two years ago was that the primary teachers at Old Dock School decided they wanted a recreation area especially for their students. They made some tentative plans and then they got in touch with Al Phillips, the outdoor recreation instructor at SCC, who takes his classes out to assist with public and community projects both as an example of how the school can work with the people and for practical experience for the students.

In the spring of last year the outdoor recreation class met and made a model of the area, including replicas of the proposed equipment and features of the playground.

One of the first problems the teachers had was the proposed location. Principal J.C. FormyDuval's house was on the site. He had the house moved, and then the schoolchildren got into the act. They helped with the project by going to the site and picking up debris accumulated over the years or left after the move. That was last year.

Then, throughout the summer, the teachers worked on acquiring the materials for the playground and equipment. Mrs. Nancy Dunlap of Whiteville, a first grade teacher and one of the seven teachers participating in the project, said that about 90 to 95 per cent of the materials for the equipment was donated, and it was on hand in time for construction to begin, done by Phillips' class last fall.

The teachers working on the project were Brenda Bullock, Rachel Scott, Nancy Dunlap, Norma Suggs, Nancy Martin, Edna Stanley and Gail Williamson.

The work took place throughout the year, and except for a few minor items most of it was completed last week, in spite of rough weather in the winter and spring. And the students didn't stop their contributions either, as two classes planted bulbs and shrubbery along the perimeter of the playground.

The largest feature of the playground is the tunneled sand mound. To build it the SCC students dug out an area to a depth of about 3 feet, and then filled it with sand. They also partially buried several large tires, lined up together, leaving a passage. The tires will later be covered, and then sand will be poured over the whole thing so that a sand dune will be left, with the tunnel going through the middle.

Presently the sand is back to ground level, but the rest of the sand is available and, weather permitting, should be poured in place within the next week or two.

The tunneled sand mound will be at the center of the playground, with the other equipment surrounding it. In addition to the recreational equipment, the Columbus County Schools put a water fountain on the site. The picnic tables will also be for more than recreation, as some of the teachers are planning occasionally to use the area for outdoor classes in good weather.

Most of the equipment is made of wood, and the wood has been treated and stained with a preservative. Future outdoor recreation classes from SCC will assist the schools in maintaining the equipment, for further experience outside the classroom.

Phillips began the course when the materials started coming in last fall, but turned the project over to Danny Wright for the actual construction.

Phillips said two things were in mind when the work began. First, the equipment emphasizes social, educational play, where children are in contact with other children and frequently have to work together to enjoy the facilities. Second, the wooden equipment in an area with trees keeps the setting natural rather than institutionalized with only metal equipment.

Soon, thanks to the work of the teachers and the college class and the help of school patrons and volunteers, the playground will be completed. On the last day the SCC students worked on the playground, Danny Wright said "I enjoyed every bit of it. I just hope the group got what we got out of it."

CETA Workers Essential To County

Columbus County News

July 26, 1978

'I don't know how programs could survive if our CETA workers were suddenly snatched away from us," commented R. Mitchell Tyler, director of personnel for the Columbus County Board of Education.

Presently there are 55 CETA assignees to the county board of education while seven work for the city schools. There is a total of 179 persons employed under the program administered by the Columbus County Board of Commissioners and allocated to various government agencies and non-profit organizations.

CETA is the acronym of the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act which the federal government passed in 1973. Its benefits in salaries to Columbus County since its inception have been approximately $3 million.

It is one federal program that is achieving what it was set up to do, for many of the CETA workers have graduated from the program into the regular work force of the agencies to which they were assigned.

Usually the first person a visitor meets upon entering the front office of the Board of Commissioners is Mrs. Bobby Dewitt, director of the county's CETA program. As a mother of seven children, this Tabor City resident realizes the importance of employment, especially for young people, in maintaining self-respect through honest work.

Said Mrs. Dewitt, "CETA provides supervised work experience and on-the-job training for the unemployed, underemployed, and economically disadvantaged citizens for the purpose of increasing their employability, their earning capacity and their ability to become self-supporting."

Top priority for qualifying is given to clients who receive Aid to Families with Dependent Children. Other factors that Mrs. Dewitt must consider include ascertaining that the applicant has been unemployed for 15 weeks or more, is ineligible for unemployment compensation or is currently receiving such benefits, whether the person is handicapped or not, and if he or she is a member of a family whose gross income is in a lower income level.

In addition to the school systems, other work sites and the number of CETA employees assigned to each are: Town of Bolton 4: Boys Home 1; Town of Brunswick 3; Town of Chadbourn 4; Town of Cerro Gordo 7; Southeastern Community College 11; Columbus County Library 2; County Police 4; Health Department 1; Columbus Sheltered Workshop 3; Bolton Day Care Center 2; Employment Security Commission, Chadbourn, 3; Town of Fair Bluff 4; Good Shepherd Home 2; Town of Lake Waccamaw 4; Miller Building 5; N.C. Forest Service 2; SENCland Community Action 4; Town of Tabor City 14; City of Whiteville 13; and Columbus County's government has reserved 22 slots of elective assignment to such agencies as the Social Security Commission, Sheriff's Department, Auditor's Office, County Recreation Department, U.S. Army Recruiting, County Dog Warden, County Administration Building, Bicentennial Commission, and the Department of Social Services.

Mrs. Pearl Fowler, social services supervisor, says the CETA program has given her department some good workers. "They have shown that they are interested in the people they serve, and they accept the limitations in certain benefits (such as no leave). Our CETA workers see this opportunity as a stepping stone in the field of work to which they have been assigned."

One of the CETA workers assigned to the Department of Social Services who is now on the regular departmental payroll is Gay Norris Jr., whose title is protective social worker. Staff members observed his maturity, understanding and patience with which he delt with clients while he was a CETA worker, and realized that he could take on more responsibilities as a regular member of the staff and with full benefits.

Mrs. Fowler said his performance has been excellent in working with neglected and abused children, their families, foster care, and a lot of court involvement. "But we have CETA to thank for diverting him to our department where he is a valuable worker," Mrs. Fowler said.

Tyler, personnel director for county schools, calls the amount of labor expended by CETA workers "tremendous." He also noted that there has been very little turnover among them and they are dependable.

Presently they are assigned to school maintenance, transportation, library assistants, clerical assistants, and teacher assistants. "A number of our CETA workers have been picked for permanent positions whenever vacancies occurred," Tyler said.

"We would be greatly handicapped if we should lose the CETA workers that the county commissioners allotted us," he added.

Mrs. Dewitt said she is deeply gratified when CETA workers graduate into regular jobs. "It gives us a great feeling of satisfaction to see that the program is accomplishing what it set out to do."

Since the Title VI guidelines have been revised, greater emphasis is being placed on serving the hard core employed.

Mrs. Dewitt has reason to be pleased with the progress of the program with which she became associated in 1973. It was as a CETA worker that she began, and presently is on the county payroll.

ANNIE RUTH STRICKLAND, representing the Columbus County Board of Elections, presents a $150 scholarship check to Theresa Cartrette of Chadbourn, a freshman at Southeastern Community College. The board earns funds for scholarships from the News Election Service by calling in local election returns for distribution to the news media. Theresa was selected because of her academic promise and financial need. She plans to major in business administration. Looking on are Dr. Ron McCarter, President of SCC, and Audra Smith, chairman of the Scholarship Committee.

Brunswick Free Press

The newly extablished Women's Center at Southeastern Community College is a service for women set up to serve the five-county region including Brunswick county. The services are provided for students and non-students of all ages who have various needs.

The purpose of the Women's Center is not to promote political beliefs, nor to persuade women to enter the work force. It is a part of Southeastern Community College that provides counseling and educational services for which the women of this region have an expressed interest. There is no cost for these services and anyone interested is encouraged to come and share their ideas.

Various age and interest groups can take advantage of these services. Homemakers can enrich their lives by participating in the various workshops in continuing education courses offered. Working women can seek counseling in career and life planning and in upgrading their present skills. The Women's Center is also set up to aid those who have decided to return to school or work.

Although women are generally the ones who fall into this category, men are also welcome to take advantage of these services. Often, returning students lack confidence in themselves, in their ability to compete with younger students and in their ability to successfully complete a course after time spent away from an academic environment. They may also experience guilt feelings from not being at home, or for using family money for their own benefit.

Women from all socio-economic backgrounds share a need for academic, personal and career counseling. They may also have a need for child-care services. In a survey taken at a recent grand opening of the Women's Center, a great deal of interest was expressed in such areas as coping with stress, slimnastics, financial management and floral design. There has also been an interest expressed in forming various support groups, among these one for battered women. Presently, stages are being taken to provide these types of services. In addition, workshops in continuing education courses are being planned and will be conducted throughout the year.

In 1977, the Council of the Status of Women in Columbus County published a report on a survey they had undertaken to determine the needs of the women in this county. At the same time, a group of interested people at Southeastern Community College formed a Women's Center Committee which sponsored several events during the year which focused on special needs of women. This past year, a proposal for federal funding was submitted to the Women's Equity and Education Act. Out of 101 applicants only 1/5 were chosen. Southeastern Community College was among these. The proposal calls for the establishment of a Women's Center to serve a small (2,000 or less FTE), rural community college. The proposal also stated that the director of this center will be responsible for developing a handbook for other community colleges to serve as a guide in setting up such Women's Centers in the future.

Nancy Mershon, coordinator of the Women's Center, is responsible for implementing the goals and objectives of this resource for women. A graduate of Randolph-Macon College in Ashland, Virginia, with a B.A. in English, and from the University of Virginia in Charlottesville, Virginia with a M.Ed. in Counseling, Ms. Mershon is well trained in counseling roles having served in counseling positions in various institutions including Baldwin College in Staunton, Virginia and the University of Virginia. She has already developed and programmed continuing education classes, workshops and seminars and developed a referral directory for community services. A major project that she has already completed is the production of a handbook on establishing Women's Centers entitled, "How To".

The Women's Center at Southeastern Community College is a very much needed resource for the women of this community. It is one step further in promoting progress for the people in this area.

Southeastern Board Announces Academic Merit Scholarship

News Reporter Nov 22, 19

The Board of Trustees of Southeastern Community College has approved the awarding of its Academic Merit Scholarship Award. This $500 award will go to the graduate of each public high school in Columbus County who has the highest GPA and who attends SCC. The award is intended to encourage academic excellence and will not interfere with the extensive financial aid programs based on financial needs of students.

"We have always had an outstanding financial aid program for students based on financial need. This aid will continue as before and is generated by federal funds matched by local funds from the Southeastern Community College Foundation," explained Dr. W. Ronald McCarter.

"The Academic Merit Scholarship Award is intended to recognize and reward outstanding scholarship at the secondary level. There is a widespread feeling today that colleges have done far too little in this regard. Funds for this award are available through an endowment created from accumulated discretionary federal grant funds. Our board is proud to be able to direct these funds toward the encouragement of academic excellence.

"In the future, we hope to expand this award to other high schools in the region. Until more funds are obtained for this purpose, however, the awards must be limited to public high schools in Columbus County," explains Dr. McCarter.

The first grant will be made in early April, 1979.

Guidelines for the awards were drawn in coordination with the public school administration. The guidelines are:

1. One recipient per high school. If no student is eligible, the award will revert to the endowment.

2. The recipient must rank in the top ten percent of the graduating class as determined by the grade point average. No students is eligible with less than a 3.0 grade point average.

3.The student with the highest GPA who ranked in the top ten percent of the class and who attends SCC will be the recipient.

4.Respective high school officials as designated by the superintenent will certify the eligible students to SCC as of the end of the third six-weeks reporting period of the senior year.

5.Candidates for the award must apply to SCC by April 1.

6.The $500 award will be credited to the appropriate student's account at SCC. Charges for tuition, fees, and books will be made against the account until the account is spent. Full-time, continuous enrollment is required. Unspent funds in any account will revert to the endowment.

7.Recipient must maintain a full load of at least 12 credit hours and a GPA of at least 3.0 while at SCC to continue receiving the award.

8.Only graduating seniors from the regular high school senior classes of 1979 and subsequent regular classes are eligible.

9.The recipient will be announced as soon as possible after April 1. Two alternates will be selected in case the recipient does not use the award for any reason. Awards are final, unless going to the next eligible two persons below the original recipient (recipients are urged to notify SCC immediately if they do not intend to enroll at SCC in order to give alternates ample time for planning before the beginning of the term).

10.Recipients will be expected to enroll in at least one honors course (minimum of three hours credit) while at SCC.

11.SCC's Adult High School Diploma graduates will be eligible. Students will be ranked by April 30 representing those completing the program during the previous 12 months. Ranking will be based on the highest percentile rank of the Iowa Test of Educational Development. Details are available in the Learning Center.

Leder To Be Honored With College Event

News Reporter

J. Herman Leder has been selected as honorary chairman of the SCC Foundation Dinner-Theatre to be held Saturday evening, April 1 on the college campus. Proceeds of the annual fundraising event are used to further the work of the Foundation.

Mr. Leder's success in business is an outstanding example of the rewards of hard work and sound management. What began as a young Austrian boy's dream of coming to America has in 53 years become the two-state, 11-store chain of Leder Brothers, Inc.

At 17, J. Herman Leder arrived in Marion, S.C., speaking no English and aspiring to success in business, with a strong belief in family and education and a determination to improve not only his own situation but that of those around him.

J. HERMAN LEDER

An uncle put him to work in a department store in Marion where, for the next four and a half years, he acquired training in merchandising, simultaneously acquiring his high school diploma.

Ready to begin his own venture at 21, he began looking far a setting and selected Vineland, then a village of several hundred people a mile south of Whiteville. Whiteville was the county seat; Vineland was on the main line of the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad. Convinced that the area's future lay in "good land and good farmers," Leder with his brother Morris began preparation for the first Leders Brothers store. On June 20, 1925 they opened for business.

Those were days when steak was 30 cents a pound, when 15 cents bought a yard of calico and a 325-acre farm was selling for $8,000. Despite the comparatively low prices business was good and, the brothers were soon ready to expand. In the late 20's, Morris Leder moved to Clinton to open the second store.

In 1930 J. Herman Leder married Yetta Leinwand of Marion, who was to become the mother of their five children and a business partner as well.

The depression brought hard times to North Carolina farmers. Recalls Herman Leder, "We didn't see any $5 bills for two or three years. Because of the cheap prices farmers were paid for their crops, money disappeared."

But by 1933 Leder had paid off his debts, giving credit to Franklin Roosevelt for having confidence in the people and getting the people to have confidence in themselves."

Today there are 11 stores in the Leder Brothers chain: Whiteville, Clinton, Smithfield, Jacksonville, Mount Olive, Tabor City, Lumberton, and Concord in North Carolina; Marion, Loris, and Conway in South Carolina.

"Shop With Confidence; Wear With Pride" — the Leder Brothers slogan — reflects 53 years of success in business. Important factors have been regular and planned advertising backed up by good merchandising, courteous service, attractive window and store displays and customer confidence.

"We have built our reputation through the years on maintaining fair and dependable stores. We will certainly do all in our power to maintain that reputation through the years to come," remarked Herman Leder on the occasion of the stores' 50th anniversary in 1975.

"We have no special formula for building and maintaining a successful business except hard work and sound management, and my wife has certainly contributed a great deal to both these factors."

J. Herman Leder and brothers Joseph of Clinton and Samuel of Jacksonville continue their business affiliation. Morris Leder, cofounder of the original store, has formed his own organization with brother Leon of Wilson and brother-in-law- Julius Segerman of Jacksonville.

From the very beginning, the Leder business goal was one of real community involvement, of becoming one with the people the business sought to serve. In advance of the opening of the Mount Olive store for example, J. Herman Leder set up a $500 annual scholarship fund to Mount Olive College, a fund which 10 years later contiunues.

In addition to their own five children, the Leders have found ways to assist others in pursuit of more education. Yearly, the Herman Leder Scholarship awards, $1,000 grant to a Whiteville High School graduate on the basis of need and academic potential.

Because one of the first recipients had financial difficulty continuing college after the first year, the Yetta Leder Loan Fund was begun by Mrs. Herman Leder and is administered by Southeastern Community College.

Firm in his conviction to help those who are willing to help themselves, Mr. Herman Leder finds his educational assistance "more important to me than the stores." He treasures a collection of letters from people who have benefited from his efforts.

Continuing his community interest, he was for 14 years a member of the Whiteville Board of Education and is perennial chairman of the United Jewish Appeal for his district. Mr. Leder was appointed to the Board of Trustees of Southeastern Community College in 1969 and is presently serving his second 8 year term. In 1969 he was also appointed to the Board of Directors to the SCC Foundation and served as Vice-President of the newly established organization. Mr. Leder is still an active member of the Board.

He is also a member of Rotary, a Shriner, a 32 degree Mason and co-founder of the Jewish Home for the Aged in Clemmons.

On June 7, 1971, at the North Carolina Merchants Association meeting held in Pinehurst, Mr. Leder was presented the Retailer of the Year award in conjunction with the North Carolina Association of Broadcasters.

On June 18, 1971, a joint resolution was passed by the Department of State General Assembly of the State of North Carolina, under Resolution 83 — a joint resolution in recognition of contributions of J. Herman Leder.

In other business, he was a founder of First National Bank, Columbus National Bank and WENC radio.

Leder Park is named in his honor. He and Mrs. Leder gave the site and are benefactors of the Whiteville Library.

Visiting Artist Visits School

Howard Whitfield, visiting artist with Southeastern Community College, recently spent two days presenting guest lectures and readings on Shakespeare to English students at Nakina High School.

The lectures to the classes of Sheila Campbell and Melba Wyche at NHS also included information on the Elizabethan theater.

In addition to the lectures, Whitfield read portions of Shakespeare's plays "Hamlet," "MacBeth," "Romeo and Juliet" and "Julius Caesar."

During his presentations to the students Whitfield said that plays are written to be performed, and that the language of Shakespeare is one of the most beautiful examples of written English in existence.

Students' comments following the presentations included such reactions as "His voice is really beautiful," "He really knows his Shakespeare," and "It is good to hear it as it is supposed to be."

Whitfield has spent more than 40 years in professional theater as an actor, director, designer and production manager. He trained as a classical actor and formerly toured with Shakespeare companies. He said he feels an obligation to promulgate living theater among the masses, and that it was this feeling which prompted his interest in the state's Visiting Artist Program.

Shakespeare

Wilmington Morning Star 2-9-78

By Ray Wyche
Star Correspondent

NAKINA — Shakespear is alive and well in Columbus County.

Classical actor Howard Whitfield, who says the Bard is his favorite playwright because "I'm an old ham myself," spent two days recently making Shakespeare come to life for English students at Nakina High School.

For most of the students, Whitefield's visit marked the first time they had heard lines from a classical play read professionally.

Whitfield, the current N.C. Arts Council visiting artist at Southeastern Community College, recites selections from classical plays to the students and explains the meanings and mechanics of the dramas.

He tells students that "Shakespeare wrote for actors to act, not for readers to read." And when Whitfield gives a recitation from a Shakespeare play, the tone of his diction-perfect voice grabs his students' attention completely. There's none of the usual schoolroom fidgeting and gazing about when Whitfield comes forth with lines that formerly were merely printed words.

Students find this method of studying Shakespeare refreshing.

"He certainly has a beautiful voice," says one senior girl.

"It's good to hear it read like it's supposed to be," another adds.

Whitfield did more than entertain; he worked with individual students who are trying out for a school play and gave them some pointers on dramatics.

The plays he usually reads to students are "Julius Caesar," Romeo and Juliet," and MacBeth," with some of "Hamlet" brought in. These works are the ones most North Carolina high school students are familiar with, he says.

"I give them a feel for it and let them see what the theater means. When an actor and people get together, you have the essence of theater; only when you have that play between an actor and audience do you have real theater."

Whitfield is not content with merely being entertaining; as he reads and recites Shakespeare's lines, he explains the meanings of the passages, as well as some of the conditions existing at the time the play was written.

"Shakespeare wrote the plays but most actors could not read. They had to be taught the lines by rote."

Whitfield brings a balanced background in the theater into his role as visiting drama artist. In addition to being a classical actor, he has served as stage manager for such Broadway hits as "Harvey," "Subways Are For Sleeping," "Zelda," "The Deputy," and "The Desperate Hours."

His skills as production stage manager have enabled him to direct sales meetings and new product introductions for some of the leading industries in the nation.

"I had to turn to other things because there's not much money in classical acting," he says.

"They paid for a seat but I didn't use it," he recalls. "I stood for the entire performance.

"I was the odd one in my high school class — I had one course, one purpose in mind. I trained to be a classical actor. I owe a debt of gratitude to my high school teachers who helped me."

His study for the exacting job as a classical actor was prolonged, he says, because he had to get rid of his native Georgia accent.

Whitfield realized that from his years of varied experience in the theater he had something to offer those not familiar with the stage. And his conscience was bothering him.

"The theater has been very good to me for over 40 years. My conscience was prodding me. I knew I ought to get out and share my experiences with students, even if they don't go into the theatre."

He found the opportunity to get away from the commercialism of the theater in a story in Actors' Equity, the magazine of professional actors. It told of the program in North Carolina in which the state Arts Council selects outstanding artists to spend a year in community colleges. From their headquarters in the college, the artists visit public schools and other institutions in the community to share their expertise and to encourage a broader participation in the arts by the public.

"I was completely sold on the idea," Whitfield says. "North Carolina is the only state with a cabinet-level post for the arts. This is the only state as far as I know that has this type program."

He thinks students need more exposure to the classical theater.

Whitfield toured college campuses throughout the country with a small company led by Charles Coburn, who Whitfield calls "my old friend." He has appeared with Coburn in other productions.

Whitfield is devotimg the second quarter of his year at Southeastern to visiting area schools. The remainder of his residency will be spent helping produce plays at the college and conducting workshops in all phases of the theater.

HAIL, HAIL — Southeastern Community College instructor Bob King exhibits hail stones he scooped up on the college grounds Monday afternoon following a freak storm. According to King the ground outside the college's science building was covered with the small balls of ice.

Storm Hits Monday

Columbus County News
4-12-78

A fast - moving freak storm dumped heavy rains and hail on Columbus County's midsection early Monday afternoon, bringing minor relief to existing dry conditions.

Th storm, which crossed the county on a northeasterly course at 30-35 m.p.h., dropped most of its load in the Chadbourn - Whiteville area, and the ground at Southeastern Community College was reportedly covered with hail.

According to Southeastern science instructor Bob King, conditions were ideal for hail.

"We had a combination of high winds and hot and cold layers of air in a culumulo nimbus cloud," King explained. "That type of cloud is necessary to create hail because they have a tremendous vertical heighth."

King said the hailstones are formed as updrafts in the cloud blow rain drops upward to colder altitudes, where they freeze, and as the process is repeated the stones become larger.

"When the hailstones finally become too heavy to be blown upward, they fall to earth," King said. "By that time they will have picked up several layers of ice, creating layered, concentric rings, or an 'onion effect.'"

King collected several containers of hailstones, the largest of which measured one-half inch in diameter, and he estimated that the largest actually measured three-quarters of an inch before they melted.

According to King's records, the rain began at 1:55 p.m., the hail at 2 p.m., and it was "hailing strong" at 2:07 p.m.

Butler is currently contacting musicians, actors, dancers and singers throughout the Southeastern North Carolina Arts Council's membership area, including the following counties: Columbus, Bladen, Brunswick, Cumberland, Duplin, New Hanover, Pender and Robeson.

"This time we're featuring acts every hour on our outdoor stage," said Butler, who commented that the stage is now 20' x 30' to better accommodate large groups.

Butler, a faculty member of Southeastern Community College's music department, is sound director for the annual "Ms. SCC Beauty Pageant". He directs, plays accoustic quitar and is vocalist for "All God's Children," an eight-member group which performs a combination of folk, rock and contemporary gospel music.

The group plays for church services, and youth rallies, and during the past year has performed in the spring Whiteville Rock-A-Thon; at the April Ninth Annual Arts and Crafts Festival at Lake Waccamaw; at the fall Farmers and Merchants Exposition; and, by special invitation, at a concert in Springfield, Ky., in November. "All God's Children" has a new album out and is currently cutting several new records.

This performing arts chairman also accompanied the SCC Choir on a spring trip to Florida last year, and will perform with them in Canada later this month. He is a member of the Faculty Senate and the Performing Arts Committee for SCC, and he does solo work at area weddings and in area churches.

The multi-arts festival also includes demonstrating craftsmen, artists, photographers, historians, writers and special library films and programs.

Alan Brownlee Speaks To Sorosis Club

Columbus County News Jan. 25 1978

The Chadbourn Sorosis Club met on January 17 in the home of Mrs. Paul Spivey. Mrs. Amanda Bible presided.

After an inspiring devotional by Mrs. Dan Moore, the club conducted its business meeting.

The club members selected Darlynn McCarter, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Ron McCarter, as nominee for the Sallie Southall Cotten Scholarship, an annual scholarship awarded by N.C. Women's Clubs.

Mrs. Dick Ward encouraged members to support local Girl Scouts by participating in their upcoming cookie drive.

Following a discussion of the attendance policy stated in the by-laws, members approved certain changes in the attendance policy.

Alan Brownlee, political science instructor at Southeastern Community College, presented an interesting program on the culture of Russia. He stated one crucial area that the United States needs to understand is the reason Russian people behave as they do. He discussed four influences in the Russian past that have affected their present behavior. These influences were the intellectual and cultural isolation of Russia, the lag behind the development of western civilization, their autocratic form of government, and the relationship of these to communism.

The meeting was adjourned to meet with Mrs. E.C. Arnette on February 21, when members will have their annual Club Craft Show.

College Man Joins School Board Race

July 27 1977

News Reporter

Robert L. (Bob) King filed Thursday as a candidate for one of the five seats on the Whiteville Board of Education to be filled through the election process in November.

King admits, "This is my first political venture, and I'm not running against anyone. But if one believes that he can be a part in improvement, then it is a duty to run."

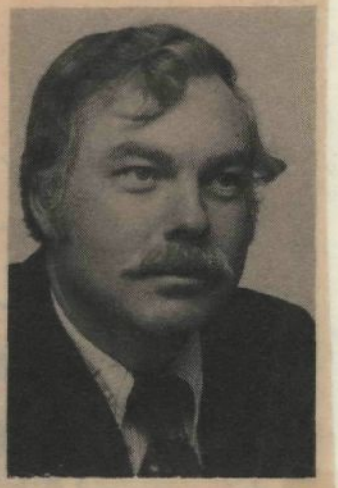
The candidate has high praise for recent efforts of the present board members, "and I would like to see them continue with the same thrust."

He believes his experience of 17 years in college teaching, 13 of which have been at Southeastern Community College, could be beneficial to the education board, especially in the field of evaluating programs. Evaluation has been one of his responsibilities in the college, and he has been appointed as a judge on accreditation teams visiting schools in Columbus and Brunswick counties.

King possesses another ability that could enhance the capabilities of the education board. "I have been able to write up applications that resulted in a number for programs at the college," he said. "Possibly I could be of the same service to the schools."

King is especially complimentary of "the good stuff that the Whiteville board has already started, especially evaluation of teachers, but he contends this should be broad-based.

"Doing what's best for our children, of course, is my main interest," King asserted. "I see an opportunity through the new testing programs of making them seem as a challenge that could result in fun for excelling. Good rapport between the administration, faculty and students is a must to achieve this," he believes.



BOB KING

King is a native of the Western Prong community of Columbus County. After graduating from Shallotte High School he earned his B.A. degree at Elon and a M.A. degree at Appalachian State University. He is coordinator of Southeastern's Science Department, having been the first instructor hired by the college in 1965 during its initial year of operation.

Mrs. King is the former Janice Piggot of Shallote. They have three children, whose ages range from 10 to 16.

King is a member and councilman of Christ the King Luthern Church, and president-elect of Whiteville Civitan Club.

High School Completion SCC Style

On May 28 at 6 p.m., history was made for Southeastern Community College's Adult High School Diploma Program. Seventy-nine diplomas were conferred to the Adult High School Diploma Program candidates during the graduation exercises at the college.

This was the largest class in the history of the program. The candidates successfully completed the requirments of a high school diploma by their continuous effort in the Programmed Instruction Center on campus and the 12 extension minilabs throughout the county.

Of these graduates, 20 completed their education through the county minilabs, especially in the areas of Nakina, Chadbourn, and Acme-Delco. They attended two nights per week during each of the two 17-week terms in a classroom situation. The remaining graduates completed their requirements on campus in the Programmed Instruction Center.

The ages and grade levels previously completed by the Adult High School graduates demonstrate the adaptability and versatility of the program. The average age of the group was 28, but the range was from 18 to 58 years old. The graduates had completed grade levels 7 through 11 in a public school prior to enrolling in the program. After 56 Kids, College Begins

Beginning a college education in mid-life is the beginning of an exciting adventure for Mrs. Winifred Rubye Webb at Southeastern Community College.

Mrs. Webb, a resident of Riegelwood, began classes in the college transfer program at Southeastern this summer. After she completes the program at SCC, she plans to earn a four-year degree.

Mrs. Webb was born in New York City and spent most of her adult life there. She and her family moved to North Carolina 13 months ago. She is the mother of 11 children and has helped rear 45 foster children.

Mrs. Webb said, "I have always felt a need to give of myself and to share my experiences and life. I feel that I best accomplish this in working with children. I was blessed as I was growing up by being loved and cared for by my grandmother. My grandmother reared my brothers, sisters and me when my mother died. Grandmother taught us to help each other, care about what is going on around us and to be useful. I have tried to live by her teaching."

WINIFRED RUBYE WEBB

Last fall Mrs. Webb became a substitute teacher at Acme-Delco High School and Riegelwood Elementary School. There she found she was able to continue her work with children and young people on a much larger scale. Young people respond to her, she said, and she has the energy and enthusiasm needed to reach them.

Her decision to work toward her teaching degree was encouraged by Norris Ebron, principal of Riegelwood Elementary School, and Hugh McManus, principal of Acme-Delco High School.

Mrs. Webb said she feels that a person should never stop trying to learn. She said, "I plan to always strive to reach my full potential and do my best in whatever situation I find myself."

Mrs. Webb is married to Theo Webb, and they plan to foster two more children this fall.

Travel-Study Class Has Italian Dinner

"I don't know what 'Crespelle Fiorentino' is, but I want some more of it!"

That and similar remarks were heard Monday night, July 17, in Room M-108 at Southeastern Community College as members of the Humanities 204, "The Italian Renaissance," had an Italian dinner which they themselves had prepared.

In addition to the Crespelle Fiorentino, which turned out to be spinach-stuffed crepes, there were three veal dishes, a squash-and-mushroom casserole, shrimp and rice, sauteed string beans, and a fresh "salata misto." For dessert, the Italy-bound students enjoyed a custard called Angela Pia, and a cheese-based, almond-flavored sponge cake, Cassata Alla Siciliana, with caffee e latta.

Twenty SCC students have been meeting on Monday nights all summer in preparation for the trip to Italy, which began July 27 and ends on August 13. Along with the teachers of the course, Christine Balogh and Curtis Welborne, they will spend 10 days in Rome, three in Florence and two in Venice, with side trips to Pompeii and Assissi. The classes have consisted mostly of films and lectures on the art, literature and philosophy of the Italian Renaissance, plus slide-films of previous SCC visits to Italy.

This will be the fifth trip to Europe undertaken by Southeastern's Humanities Department, in addition to a travel-study tour of Mexico this summer, conducted by SCC instructor John Voorhees.

Welborne said that other trips are in the works, and that all high school graduates 18 years old and over are eligible to enroll in the travel-study courses.

Bloodmobile To Honor Late SCC Counselor

News Reporter 7-17-78

Friends of the late Vincent Sweet will have a chance Thursday to honor his memory with a gift of life-saving blood as the Red Cross Bloodmobile visits the Central Baptist Church on Walter Street between twelve noon and 5:30 p.m.

Donors will have an opportunity to sign a scroll commemorating the event. The scroll will be given to Vincent's widow, Pam.

County volunteer Blood Chairman, Mrs. Betty Welborne, said the memorial was particularly fitting because of the help and encouragement Mr. Sweet always gave the blood program before his untimely death this summer. Vincent was a counselor at Southeastern Community College and was highly respected by students and staff.

The Rev. David Flowers, himself an alumnus of Southeastern, is Pastor of Central Baptist and a long-time blood donor. Mr. Flowers has expressed his appreciation for the opportunity to provide the site for the Bloodmobile visit and has asked all able-bodied members and friends of the church to make a special effort to come Thursday and give a pint of much-needed blood. Rev. Flowers and Mrs. Welborne stressed that this is not a closed visit and that donors from all over the county and beyond are urged to participate.

VINCENT SWEET

The need for blood is especially great during the summer months. Local Red Cross officials were informed Saturday that all types of blood except AB negative are in short supply, with four of the eight types on emergency status. They reminded the "old faithful" donors in the county that they can give every eight weeks and that all should check blood cards and give as often as possible since blood is in such critically short supply.

Persons desiring more information about the bloodmobile should call 642-3364 or 642-7415.

A Long Trip Ends At SCC

Columbus County News 12-13-78

By ERIC McLAMB

Getting to know Janos Balogh, Equipment Coodinator at Southeastern Community College, is quite an experience in itself. What is history for Janos is just as intriguing as what he is doing now.

Janos is a native of Budapest, Hungary; his wife, Christine, an art instructor at SCC, is also a native of Budapest. The fate that lay ahead for Mr. and Mrs. Balogh was not to be easily achieved. Janos has known Christine since 1948. However, he was forced to leave Hungary (and the presence of Christine) in 1956 because of his democratic beliefs) which influenced the unsuccessful Hungarian Revolution). After he left Hungary, Janos took refuge in Vienna. "My first desire was to go to the United States," Janos said, referring to seeking permanent residence after obtaining refuge in Vienna. "But I would have had to wait for six months before the U.S. could take me, and I wanted to leave right away. Sweden took me in five days."

In the meantime, Christine had also left Hungary, but she took residence in Vienna. "When I found out that she was in Vienna," Janos said, "that's when I started to travel." He was referring to numerous trips he made between Sweden and Vienna to see his future wife. Janos proposed to Christine in Vienna, and they were married in Sweden in 1965.

After their marriage, the couple began making plans to move to the United States, which they did in 1967. After arriving in the United States, Christine was employed by St. Andrews Presbyterian College in Laurinburg, while Janos found short-term employment in Cleveland, Ohio. In August 1968, Janos was employed by Southeastern Community College and immediately rejoined Christine in Whiteville as a result. Christine had earlier been employed by SCC as an art instructor.

JANOS BALOGH (R), shown with his wife Christine, has been said by co-workers at Southeastern Community College to have "a smile for every occasion." The Baloghs, originally from Hungary, have known each other since 1948, were married in Sweden in 1965, and became U.S. citizens in 1976. (Photo by Eric McLamb)

Having received a B.S. degree in electronics while in Budapest, Janos was hired as an instructor in electronics. He taught until 1975 when he became the Equipment Coordinator in the Audio-Visual Department, which involves setting up equipment for classroom use as well as repairing and keeping inventory of SCC's equipment. "None of the equipment goes off campus for repairs," Janos said, expressing pride in his work. "It saves time and money for the college and it will also allow the existing equipment to be in use 99 percent of the time."

As a hobby, Janos is involved with general radio operating in which he recently received a general amateur operator's license. Becoming a United States citizen in 1976 allowed him to obtain a license. "You could not become an amateur (radio operator) in Hungary unless your were a Communist," Janos said. "Since I am now a citizen of the U.S., I am able to obtain an amateur license."

Janos also has skills in pottery, car repair, photography and telegraphy, but his skill in house-building stands out, since he did most of the work on his present home. He, Christine, and their 12-year-old daughter, Valerie, moved to their present home in Lake Waccamaw in 1976 after living for eight years in Whiteville.

Art and crafts created by 16 North Carolina artists will be on display through April 28, at the Administration Building of Southeastern Community College in a special exhibition circulated by the North Carolina Museum of Art.

The Columbus County Arts Council is the co-sponsor of the exhibit with the college, and notes that Tom Cowan, Whiteville's Third Century Artist last year, has a work in the exhibition.

Becky Marlin, librarian at SCC, coordinated the showing of the exhibit and commented that "the exhibit is one of the most varied we have had and should be appreciated by all members of the community." Brochures describing the exhibit in detail are available at the information desk at the entrance to the Building, Administration Building, which is open from 8:30 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Thursday and from 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Friday.

The paintings, weavings, photographs and other objects in the show were created by participants in the Third Century Artists Program (TCAP), a public arts projected named for America's post-bicentennial century and administered by the North Carolina Arts Council.

The exhibition, which is being circulated to galleries all over the state, is named "One From a Third" because each Third Century Artist was invited to submit one work for it.

TCAP uses federal funds appropriated under the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act (CETA) to hire unemployed or underemployed artists and put them to work in community arts projects. Besides visual artists, it employs dancers, dramatists, vocalists, musicians and arts administrators.

Both current and past TCAs participated in the "One From a Third" exhibition.

Southeastern Times
11-13-78

A sampling of some of the best work being produced by contemporary North Carolina artists will be on display in the lobby of the Administration Building at SCC until November 24.

The exhibition is a selection of 18 works from the 40th annual North Carolina Artists Exhibition (NCAE), which was on view from December 1, 1977, through January 8, 1978, at the N.C. Museum of Art in Raleigh.

Library Needs Room

News Reporter 11-30-78

Southeastern Community College has one of the finest collections of learning resources in the North Carolina community college system. Among the fifty-seven member institutions, Southeastern boasts the largest collections of microfilms and phonorecords and ranks fourth in both the number of book volumes and the number of magazine subscriptions.

On the other end of the spectrum, Southeastern ranks last in the size of its library facility; the shelving capacity is already 47 percent below suggested national standards while the book collection continues to grow at an annual rate of 1300 - 1500 volumes per year.

In order to maintain quality library service and easy accessibility to this vast reservoir of learning resources, a new building is needed. The Department of Community Colleges has allocated $500,000 for the construction of a new building contingent upon matching local funds.

"Our county commissioners have voiced their desire to see this college library building be made available to students and citizens at large," says Dr. Ron McCarter, president of SCC. "We hope our citizens will support our commissioners when the time comes to allocate these funds."

Stirewalt, a noted expert in this field. This course offering has been very successful in the past. However, this time even greater interest is expected with the recent popularity of genealogical pursuits resulting from the work of Alex Haley and the publication and television performance of Roots. The course will meet on Monday nights for eleven weeks from 7:00 to 10:00 beginning March 13. The course will be a three credit course applicable to partially fulfilling the associate degree requirements in the elective category. However, as is so with the geography course, a special invitation is extended to those high school graduates who would be interested in taking the course without regard to the pursuit of a degree.

--Methods of lineage research.

Southeastern Adds New Curriculum

News Reporter 3-30-78

Southeastern Community College recently received approval from the North Carolina State Board of Education to offer a Teacher Associate program with a specialty in Reading Teaching Technology. Upon successful completion of two year program the student will receive the Associate in Applied Science degree.

According to Leon Fox, Dean of Occupational Education, the new Teacher Associate program will officially begin with the 1978 fall quarter. The purpose of the new program will be to train suitable qualified students to fuction in the professional role of providing reading instruction for small groups of children. In addition to training new reading teaching technicians, the program will also update and certify people already working in the schools, but who have little training in reading teaching skills.

The trained reading technician will assist the classroom teacher in dealing with children who have special reading problems as well as providing much needed assistance in offering reading to classes too large for one teacher.

The need for such a program is evidenced by the emphasis being placed on reading instruction at both the state and national level. Support for this program from the local public school officials has been very good, and a portion of the training each student receives will include part-time laboratory work and a one-quarter internship in the public schools. The internship program will provide the student with valuable experience in the actual classroom setting and will give them an opportunity to put into actual practice the teaching techniques they have learned.

A unique feature of the new Teacher Associate program is that it will share many first year courses with Southeastern's existing Early Childhood Specialist program. This similarity between the two programs during the first year of instruction will provide the student with the option of choosing either program before beginning the second year. Thus, the student who successfully completes the first year of the program and meets the eligibility requirements for continuing into the second year may choose either the reading teaching technician option or the Early Childhood Specialist option. The student who elects to stop at the end of the first year will receive a diploma in Child Development.

Anyone interested in obtaining more information about the new Teaching Associate program with the Reading Teaching Technician specialty should contact Leon M. Fox Jr., Dean of Occupational Education at 642-7141.

Job Satisfaction Found In Welding

News Reporter 3-16-78

David Michael Norris of Whiteville, owns and operates a welding business in Whiteville.

He is a graduate of the welding program at Southeastern Community College. Welding instructor Ed Pate is proud of Mike and his accomplishments. At 24 years of age he has tried his hand at several occupations. His first job was in a bicycle repair shop at age 15. From there, he gave serious thought to becoming a mechanic. Then he tried carpentry for a couple of years. Welding is the job Mike plans to stay with.

Mike stated, "I had a lot of trouble the first half of the year in the Welding Program, but halfway through the year I had a positive religious experience and began to take my classes seriously."

After graduating from Southeastern, he worked for Daniels' Construction until he was able to open his own business last summer. Mike said, "I knew I could have a good future in welding and that is why I was determined to have a place of my own!"

Inside Mike's Welding Shop, the scene is strictly business. Machines, tools and all manner of equipment occupy walls and floor. Mike works behind a face mask and sends sparks flying as he plies his trade. He can be seen leaving his welding to talk with someone who seeks advice in making his own repairs.

The most prominent item in the building is a wood-burning stove that Mike has made by himself. Also in a corner is an ax and logs, which indicate he provides his own energy. Mike said, "I also made a wood-burning stove for home, only it is fancier than this one. Fuel costs were so high that I had to do something, so I found a picture of one I liked and started working on it. It works fine. I stoke it once in the morning and once at night, and it holds."

Young Mr. Norris has plans to enlarge his business by moving to a larger location. In the larger building he eventually plans to expand into doing machine work also. He states, "Lots of planning and hard work have gone into the business." He clearly intends to be a success.

Mike is married to Dottie Jayroe Norris of Whiteville. She is a graduate of the College Transfer Program at SCC, and they are expecting their first child in June.

MIKE NORRIS, a graduate of the SCC Welding program, has opened his own business and plans to make it his profession.

It Takes More Than Gun And Badge

A gun and a badge are symbols of law enforcement. However, it takes much more to create a law enforcement officer. It takes time, perseverance and well-planned training. Southeastern Community College is aware of this and has made great strides in equipping students and in-service officers with basic and specialized instruction.

Coordinating Southeastern's efforts in the area of law enforcement training is Marshall Shepherd. Shepherd was a full-time law officer in Greensboro from 1957-74 and is in tune with the needs and aims of today's law officer. He graduated from Guilford College in 1973 with a degree in Law Enforcement and Criminal Justice. Shepherd came to SCC in 1974 and, since that time, has worked consistantly to improve the Criminal Justice Department at the college. He has worked closely with local law enforcement agencies to promote up-to-date training for all law enforcement officers.

Shepherd stated, "Law Enforcement Training requirements have been established by the North Carolina Criminal Justice Training and Standards Council, which was created by the 1971 General Assembly." He added, "I have seen much improvement in our law enforcement officers. They are more aware of the need for education and training." He also pointed out, "Any officer who has power to arrest is required to have Basic Training."

Basic Training encompasses numerous areas of study, such as Laws of Arrest, Criminal Investigation, Firearms, Traffic Accident Investigation and Search and Seizure.

On campus at SCC, Criminal Justice classes are taught on a daily or evening basis enabling in-service officers to participate in classes during off-duty hours. It is also for pre-training of those seeking a four-year degree in Law Enforcement and others in the community who are interested in learning about law enforcement. Shepherd feels that the most critical element in having good law enforcement officers is police department administration that encourages and promotes education to keep officers up-to-date in all areas of criminal justice.

Shepherd related that SCC has an excellent record of students transferring to four-year schools after graduation from the Criminal Justice program. Graduates of the program are now attending East Carolina University, Shaw University, Guilford College, Fayetteville State University and the University of North Carolina at Wilmington. The program has also placed graduates in law enforcement jobs throughout the state. Shepherd said, "SCC has a most comprehensive program. It is the only training center with its own firing range, which is used by law enforcement Training, the program offers Self Defense, Firearms Safety and Emergency Medical Training. These courses are available to the community in general as well as to in-service officers."

As a part of Law Enforcement Training, SCC has established a satellite campus at the Riegelwood Fire Department in Riegelwood. There are approximately 17 students enrolled. Instructor for the class is SBI agent, John Dorsett, longtime friend of Shepherd. The two served as law enforcement officers in Greensboro and both graduated from Guilford College.

Law enforcement officers comprise about 30 percent of the enrollment in this program. The remainder are students interested in becoming law officers and those in the community interested in law enforcement.

Based on the present economy Shepherd stated, "Within the next ten years, more than 600,000 new jobs in law enforcement will be available. The demand for more well-trained, educated officers will intensify. It will become increasingly difficult to get jobs with less than a two-year degree." He added, "The staff of the Criminal Justice Department of SCC is available to talk with schools and civic groups about the program and related courses."

The trained reading technician will assist the classoom teacher in dealing with children who have special reading problems as well as providing much needed assistance in offering reading to classes too large for one teacher.

The need for such a program is evidenced by the emphasis being placed on reading instruction at both the state and national level. Support for this program from local public school officials has been very good, and a portion of the training each student receives will include part-time laboratory work and one-quarter internship in the public schools. The intership program will provide the student with valuable experience in the actual classroom setting and will give them an opportunity to put into actual practice the teaching techniques they have learned.

A unique feature of the new Teacher Associate program is that it will share many first year courses with Southeastern's existing Early Childhood Specialist program. This similarity between the two program during the first year of instruction will provide the student with the option of choosing either program before beginning the second year. Thus, the student who successfully completes the first year of the program and meets the eligibility requirements for continuing into the second year may choose either the Reading Teaching Technician option or the Early Childhood Specialist option. The student who elects to stop at the end of the first year will receive a diploma in Child Development.

Anyone interested in obtaining more information about the new Teaching Associate program with the Reading Teaching Technician specialty should contact Mr. Leon M. Fox, Jr., Dean of Occupational Education at 642-7141.

News Reporter 3-2-78

Beginning with the 1978 spring quarter, Southeastern Community College will offer evening courses leading to a certificate in air conditioning and refrigeration. This program, which will be fully implemented beginning with the 1978 fall quarter, consists of four quarters of instruction offered during the evening hours in subjects including air conditioning, blueprint reading, and applied electricity.

Courses offered in the certificate program will be identical to courses offered in the regular one-year diploma program in air conditioning. This will allow a student the option of using credits earned in the certificate program to work toward completion of a diploma.

Registration for the spring quarter classes will be Tuesday, March 7. AHR 1123 AA, principles of air conditioning, will be offered on Tuesday evenings from 6 until 10 beginning Tuesday, March 14. This course deals with the design and selection of various heating, cooling, and ventilating systems for a variety of commercial and industrial applications.

Also studied are the measurement and control of variables affecting air cleaning, movement, temperature, and humidity. Further study includes assembly and testing of commercial air conditioning equipment and training in practical sizing and balancing of duct work.

The second course being offered is BPR 1110A, blueprint reading and sketching, which is scheduled for Thursday evenings from 7 until 10 beginning March 9. This course covers the principles of interpreting blueprints and specifications common to the building trades. The student in this course also develops proficiency in making three-view and pictorial sketches.

Additional courses will be offered during the summer quarter, including the second half of AHR 1123, principles of air conditioning. Beginning in the fall quarter, the full program will meet four evenings per week. This will allow the student to complete the certificate requirements in four quarters, unless the student chooses to take longer to complete the program by attending fewer than four evenings per week.

Reading emphasis opens SCC program

March 23 1978

Wilmington Morning Star

By Leslie Gruber
Regional Editor

WHITEVILLE — The new emphasis on improving reading capabilities of school pupils will lead to a teacher associate program with a speciality in reading technology at Southeastern Community College west of here starting with the fall quarter.

This will be a two-year course, leading to an associate degree, Leon M. Fox Jr., dean of occupational education, said. Its graduates will be qualified to work as reading teaching assistants in classes or reading labs. They will be specialized teacher technicians.

The new reading project will be tied into SCC's existing early childhood specialist program, Fox said. "We hope some of the students now in the child development program will switch in their second year to the reading program so we will have some graduates ready for jobs by the end of the next academic year."

Fox said the first year curriculum in the child development program is the same as in the reading program. While the childhood specialist program can be a one-year project for a student, it also offers a second year course, which the school now provides, he added.

Fox said about 90 students are enrolled in the childhood specialist program.

"The whole project evolved out of the governor's reading emphasis program," he indicated.

Fox noted the new emphasis on reading requires more people specialized in teaching reading and most teachers aides now lack this specialization.

What the job situation for these students will be upon graduation will depend on continued emphasis on reading by the state and upon the level of financial support maintained, he added.

He said the public schools have been involved in the new program and it looks encouraging now.

Fox said the training will include the early childhood specialist class work plus additional specialized class work, part-time laboratory work and internship in the public schools for one quarter.

Law Enforcement Education Part Of Southeastern's Effort

A gun and a badge are symbols of law enforcement. However, it takes much more to create a law enforcement officer. It takes time, perseverance and well-planned training. Southeastern Community College is awae of this and has made great strides in equipping students and in-service officers with basic and specialized instruction.

Coordinating Southeastern's efforts in the area of law enforcement training is Marshall Sheperd. Shepherd was a full-time law officer in Greensboro from 1957-74 and is in tune with the needs and aims of today's law offices. He graduated from Guilford College in 1973 with a degree in Law Enforcement and Criminal Justice.

Shepherd came to SCC in 1974 and, since that time, has worked consistantly to improve the Criminal Justice Department at the college. He has worked closely with local law enforcement agencies to promote up-to-date training for all law enforcement officers.

Shepherd stated, "Law Enforcement Training requirements have been established by the North Carolina Criminal Justice Training and Standards Council, which was created by the 1971 General Assembly." He added, "I have seen much improvement in our law enforcement officers. They are more aware of the need for education and training." He also pointed out, "Any officer who has power to arrest is required to have basic Training."

On campus at SCC, Criminal Justice classes are taught on a daily or evening basis enabling in-service officers to participate in classes during off-duty hours. It is also for pre-training of those seeking a four-year degree in Law Enforcement and others in the community who are interseted in learning about law enforce ment. Shepherd feels that the most critical element in having good law enforcement officers is police department administration that encourages and promotes education to keep officers up-to-date in all areas of criminal justice.

Shepherd related that SCC has an excellent record of students transferring to four-year schools after graduation from the Criminal Justice program. Graduates of the program are now attending East Carolina University, Shaw University, Guilford College, Fayetteville State University and the University of North Carolina at Wilmington The program has also placed graduates in law enforcement jobs throughout the stated. Shepherd said, "SCC has a most comprehensive program. It is the only training area." He added, "We are not only involved in Law enforcement Training, the program offers Self Defense, Firearms Safty and Emergency Medical Training. These courses are available to the community in general as well as to in-service officers."

As a part of Law Enforcement Training, SCC has established a satellite campus at the Riegelwood Fire Department in Riegelwood, N.C. There are approximately 17 students enrolled. Instructor for the class is SBI agent, John Dorsett, longtime friend of Shepherd. The two served as law enforcement officers in Greensboro and both graduated from Guilford College.

Law enforcement officiers in Greensboro and both graduated from

Law enforcement officers comprise about 30 per cent of the enrollment in this program. The remainder are students interested in becoming law officers and those in the community interested in law enforcement.

Based on te present economy Shepherd stated, "Within the next ten years, more than 600,000 new jobs in law enforcement will be available. The demand for more well-trained, educated officers will intensify. It will become increasingly difficult to get jobs with less than two-year degree." He added, "The staff of the criminal Justice Department of SCC is available to talk with schools and civic groups about the program and related courses."

For futher information call Mr. Shepherd at the college, 642-7141, Ext. 58.

SCC Offers Special Courses For Graduating High School Students

Southeastern Times May 17, 1978

Southeastern Community College has designed special classes to meet the needs of graduating high school students, whether planning to attend Southeastern in the fall or go elsewhere.

The registration time and the first day of classes has been set for June 9, a later time than for the usual commencement of Southeastern summer school so as to align with the high school graduations.

An opportunity to complete some of the more difficult required courses such as Math 101-103, Biology 101-103 and English 101-103, during a time when full concentration and effort can be given to them, and under the tuteledge of instructors specially skilled in providing individualized help;

An opportunity to gain exposure and to begin adjustment to a college setting while taking an activity oriented course such as Music 197, Electric Bass Guitar, PED 105, Beginning Tennis and PED 119-sailing;

An opportunity to undertake work in areas needing special attention such as English 91, Math 91, and Reading 91, in order to be prepared for a regular sequence of courses in the fall.

An opportunity to take short courses designed to sharpen study skills to help insure success in college such as Orientation 194.

Study Skills for the Four-Year Student, and to help prepare for a career after college such as Psychology 194-Awareness for the Four-Year College Student.

The cost of making this summer such a profitable and rewarding one is very low. Tuition is $3.25 per credit hour for North CA Carolina residents. As an additional consideration, it is often easy to combine the scheduling of a course or two with a summer job or other summer activity.

Although the announced course offerings mentioned here have been specially scheduled for the recently graduated senior to help "Bridge the Gap" between high school and college, any high school graduate may enroll. Contact Mrs. Judy Young in the Admissions Office by phone (642-7141 Ext. 25), mail or in person not later than Friday, June 2, if you are interested in these special course.

Although these courses offered for recent high school graduates begin June 9 or after, many others have been scheduled in the summer that will begin May 31. This full schedule may be obtained at the college or by calling (642-7141, Ext. 27.)

SCC Offering Broadcasting Course

Brunswick Beacon May 25 1978

May is National Radio Month, so it seemed appropriate that a group of local broadcasters met to discuss the problem of a lack of trained personnel to fill the needs of local broadcast stations.

Radio station executives, including general managers from WENC in Whiteville, WTAB in Tabor City, WBLA in Elizabethtown and WOOZ in Whiteville met May 9, along with Bill Wilson, dean of Adult Education at Southeastern Community College, to plan a training program in the form of a course in broadcast announcing to begin June 6 and to last for ten weeks at Southeastern.

The Broadcasting classes will be held on Tuesday and Thursday evenings from 7 p.m. until 10 p.m. Registration will take place at the first class meeting.

Students will be taught the rules and regulations of the Federal Communications Commission, copy writing, reading for broadcast, techniques of broadcast announcing, formating a broadcast station, news reporting, program logs and an introduction to broadcast equipment.

High school graduates or anyone who is 18 years old and not enrolled in the public schools may enroll.

Anyone desiring additional information on the Broadcasting course whould contact Bill Wilson, dean of Adult Education at Southeastern Community College, or Greg Singletary at WOOZ Radio in Whiteville.

Southeastern College Humanities To Lead Summer Tour Of Italy

Tabor City Tribune 5-24-1978

In Humanities Department of Southeastern Community College will conduct a second two-week travel-study tour in three cities of Italy this summer according to the Department's Coordinator Curtis L. Welborne.

The program is built around a five-credit course entitled "The Italian Renaissance," which will begin with the first summer term on June 1. The course is team-taught by Mr. Welborne and Mrs. Christine Balogh, who heads the Art Department at Southeastern. Both instructors will accompany the student to Italy on July 28. The group will return on August 13.

This will be the second trip to Italy undertaken by the Department in addition to several study tours of England and Scotland. Approximately 30 SCC students studied in Rome, Florence, Milan and Venice last summer in the first of what the instructors hope will be an annual pilgrimage. The cost of the tour this year is only slightly higher than last year although the dollar has lost value in Europe since last summer. Both instructor said they believe the trip will be better this year because the flight will be into and out of Rome instead of Milan, giving the group more time in the Enternal City and in Florence and Venice. In addition, there will be a stopover this summer in Assisi, the home of St. Francis. Mrs. Balogh said she is particularly pleased about this because Assisi's churches have dozens of frescoes by the early Renaissance painter, Giotto.

According to Mr. Welbourn, one of the most frequentl asked questions about the SCC trips is whether only students can go on them. He said that, although the program is restricted to students, anyone who is a high school graduate and at least 18 years old can register and become a student. In other words, the program is open to adults in the community who are eligible to enroll for the five-hour core course. He pointed out that all of the SCC programs have been highly successful, due in large measure to the fact that the ages of the students have ranged from 18 to the 80's, promoting a stimulating exchange of ideas and reactions to the places visited. "We have found that teenagers and older people get along beautifully," he said. "They seem to push each other along. The older student tends to be afraid at first that they can't keep up the furious pace of the study-tour, but they soon find out that it is the younger students who have tro

The older students tend to be afraid at first that they can't keep up the furious pace of the study-tour, but they soon find out that it is the younger students who have trouble keeping up."

Welborne said that there are only a few vacancies left on the trip roster, over 20 students already having enrolled. "Our limit is 35 this time and the deadline for deposits is Monday, May 15, so we urge interested people to call us at the college, extension 47, for further information and a reservation." Total cost of the travel portion is $690, including all transportation from New York City and back and among the cities to be visited in Italy, breakfast each day and double-occupancy hotel rooms in all cities.

Both instructors will accompany the students throughout the tour and urge all participants to have sturdy walking shoes and a lot of endurance. "We don't go to Europe to study the inside of hotel rooms," Mrs. Balogh said. "We keep moving, using the local transportation, which is very good in the cities of Europe. This saves a lot of money and lets the students really see the country, not just the tourist spots. We avoid the commerical tours and make our own."

Proud Of Pottery Program

News Reporter 9-28-78

Pottery, one of the world's finest and oldest crafts, has become a major business in today's world. The pottery program at Southeastern Community College is devoted to supporting this ancient art of potmaking through which many of man's earliest utensils were made. The students in this program further substantiate that pottery stands alone as an irreplaceable part of our culture.

Mary Taft, instructor of pottery at Southeastern, asserts that pottery is more that just a craft. "Pottery is a fine art. It's not something that anybody can do," affirms Miss Taft. "It requires a lot of dedication and hard work. In order to be a good potter, you have to practice it everyday. Everything you do has a little craft involved whether it is painting, print making or sculpture."

SCC offers pottery in three categories: pottery production, night classes and electives. Presently, about 15 students are taking the night courses and 35 are taking pottery as electives. People from the community enroll in the night classes, held on Monday and Wednesday nights from 7 - 9:30 p.m., and work toward perfecting pottery as a personal hobby. These students usually spend three hours in lectures and two hours in the shop each week.

Students taking pottery as an elective receive the basic information and training in pottery which allow them to become familiar with the art and its techniques. Students are enrolled in these courses for three days each week and for our hour each day. About one-third of the students involved in the electives and night courses will continue to take advanced courses.

The main thrust of the pottery program at SCC is centered around the pottery production course. Currently, there are seven students enrolled in the Pottery Production Program. This course is designed to prepare the student for gaining employment or self-employment in pottery or pottery-related fields. Besides taking the necessary courses in ceramics, the student is required to take courses in business, engineering and chemistry in order to graduate. These students work in pottery several hours each day for four quarters.

After graduation, the student may set up his or her own shop. Miss Taft states that most students had rather serve an apprenticeship in pottery before opening up a shop. "More shops are operated in the Piedmont section of this state and therefore there is more opportunity for students to do their apprenticeship there." At this time, only two of the students wish to start their own shop right away.

All students taking pottery at Southeastern learn two methods of pot making: throwing and hand building. Throwing, the most popular method, involves the technique of molding pots and other containers from a slab of clay while it spins in the center of a potter's wheel. Hand building involves the creation of various clay structures without the use of any mechanical devices. After the finished product has dried, it is fired in a kiln, a process which hardens and strengthens the clay substances. Usually, a glaze is painted on pots and other clay utensils after the first firing and then fired a second time to solidify the glaze and adhere it to the pot.

The art of pottery creates its own expressions in its color, texture and form. This ancient craft, one of the oldest professions in the world, enables people to express themselves as well as utiliziing it as a means of making a living. Southeastern Community College is proud of its Pottery Program and the opportunity to support a great part of man's culture.

SCC Trains Women For Specialized Jobs In Skill Training Improvement Program

Tabor City Tribune 10-4-78

Women are becoming more active in today's business world and as a result more women are serving in non-traditional roles than ever before. The Occupational Education Division at Southeastern Community College is involved in training women for these specialized roles at a high rate of success. One program that has been highly successful is the Skill Training Improvement Program for women which is funded through a program component of the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act (CETA).

The program at SCC, one of the only three schools in North Carolina that participated in this training course, was designed to train women in the skill of welding. Each student received 6 months of training in the skill area to be followed by 6 months of on-the-job training. On September 8th, thirteen women were graduated from the training program.

The North Carolina Council on the Status of Women aids each woman enrolled in this program in finding employment. This council was also responsible for obtaining the initial proposal and funding of the project.

Mr. Leon M. Fox, Jr., Dean of Occupational Education at Southeastern, is very pleased with the success of the program. "We encourage all women to participate in any of our vocational programs," affirms Mr. Fox. "I'm pleased with the success we have had in our programs, and I am optimistic about encountering an even higher degree of success in the future."

SCC is pleased to offer occupational education for women as well as for all people in the community and to have the opportunity to offer a program such as the Skill Training Improvement Program.

Southeastern To Offer Certificate For Nurse Assistants This Winter

Tabor City Tribune 11-22-78

Southeastern Community College will offer a Nurse Assistant certificate program during the day, beginning with the 1978 winter quarter. The Nurse Assistant program is designed to meet the increasing need for trained personnel to provide basic nursing care for patients.

Working under the supervision of a licensed nurse, the nurses' assistant is an unlicensed health care worker who can perform a number of routine tasks that allow the licensed nurse to devote more time to specialized nursing care. Through employment of well-trained nurses' assistants, many hospitals and nursing homes are able to provide effective patient care in spite of often critical shortages of licensed nurses.

The Nurse Assistant program is a credit program which is open to high school graduates. Courses are offered over a two quarter period for a total of 242 hours of instruction.

First quarter courses cover reading skills, a brief history of nursing care, medical terminology, and an introduction to basic nursing care.

In the second quarter, the student receives continued instruction in medical terminology, and an introduction to basic nursing care.

In the second quarter, the student receives continued instruction in medical terminology and more in-depth training in basic nursing skills including a minimum of forty hours of clinical training in a hospital or nursing care facility.

Some of the nursing skill topics covered in the program include maintaining sanitary conditions, hospital bed preparation, bathing and feeding the patient, measuring and recording vital signs, and care of patient before and after surgery.

SCC Offers Outdoor Recreation

News Reporter 11-2-78

Imagine spending a few days in the great American outdoors where it is just you, your gear and your companion. Encountering a timber rattlesnake on the Applachian Trail or becoming entangled in a wild canoe ride in a river rapid would be quite an overwhelming experience for the amateur outdoorsman.

If conducted properly, participation in outdoor activities can become an enjoyable and important part of your life. The Outdoor Recreation Resources Program at Southeastern Community College is involved with training students in participating in and organizing outdoor activities and recreational facilities.

Al Phillips, instructor in the Outdoor Recreation Resources Program, said the primary objectives of the program are to train people in three areas: park maintenance, outdoor recreational programming, and nature interpretation.

Park maintenance involves the areas of general construction and indoor and outdoor maintenance of recreational facilities, organizing and planning maintenance tasks and waste-water treatment.

Outdoor recreational programming includes planning, organizing and participation in recreational activities around environmental resources.

Interpretation of the natural environment comprises the nature interpretation segment. This involves identifying and becoming familiear with wildlife, plants, geology (rocks and their formation) and historical sites.

An associates in applied science degree in outdoor recreation can be obtained through satisfactorily completing the two-year course. Students who wish to continue training in this field usually transfer to Ferrum College in Ferrum, Va., where they may obtain a bachelor of science degree in leisure services or environmental studies.

The content of the outdoor recreation curriculum gives the student well-balanced training in outdoor recreation so that he may gain the experience necessary to be qualified to work in local, state or national parks, campgrounds and any other outdoor recreation area. Not only recreation courses are taught. The basic education courses such as English, math and speech are taught so that the student will be well prepared to deal with planning, layout design and construction of programming recreational facilities, public relations and other aspects that deal with outdoor recreation as well as actual participation.

According to Phillips, 76 per cent of the graduates have found employment in outdoor recreation or other related fields. For example, a student may be qualified as a forest technician by enrolling in the proper elective courses. Employment in this area would include various private forest products companies as well as state and federal government forest agencies.

Courses such as woodsmanship and camping, forestry, forest botany and ecology, forest soils, horticulture, park maintenance, plant identification and wildlife science fall under the direct supervision of the program. Field trips are just as important in the Outdoor Recreation curriculum.

These outings are used to provide the student with an environment to observe and to practice many other and to practice many other skills taught in the classroom. Such field trips include mountain climbing, camping and canoe trips; trips to historical and national monument sites; and tours of local industries, state, national and municipal parks, private camps, lakes, rivers and forest areas. The field trips have included excursions to the Applachian Trail and Pisgah National Forest, both in North Carolina, and the Chat-

BILL BALL, an instructor in the SCC Outdoor Recreation Program, said "If you ever encounter a snake, it is best just to leave him alone. You might not be able to tell whether he is poisonous or not." Phillips said that in addition to regular course offerings, a cooperative education program is offered in the summer for students to receive work experience, or an internship, by being placed in a park or a municipal recreation setting or private camp. "This program helps the student further develop his technical skills as well as it gives him adequate training in a working environment," Phillips said. He said placement throuh the cooperation of the student and the advisor.

The individual's obligation to his society is emphasized in the outdoor recreation program, according to Phillips. "Each student is provided with opportunities to participate in community service projects such as working with the mentally and physically handicapped, helping to sponsor special olympics for the mentally retarded, assisting local recreation departments in some of their maintenance programs, working with public schools in the design and construction of playgrounds and helping to raise money for the Easter Seal Society.

"In today's world of leisure, man is finding more time to spend outdoors in the natural environment. Southeastern is very much aware of this trend. Through its outdoor recreation resources program, SCC provides the training necessary to make this trend safe, healthy and enjoyable as well as to provide well-balanced training for an individual to find employment in the field. SCC is pleased to be able to participate in one of America's most natural activities — outdoor recreation," Phillips concluded.

Complete Course On Body Repair

Eight students recently completed a 22-week training program in auto body repair sponsored by Southeastern Community College and the Employment Security Commission in Chadbourn. The class-size project was made possible through CETA training funds which were used to provide financial assistance to students enrolled in the program.

Attending class for 30 hours each week, the students were instructed in the basics of auto body repair. Basic topics covered included removal of dents, use of body filler material, surface preparation and priming and final finish painting techniques. After mastering some of the basic skills, students spent the majority of shop work on live projects which involved repair and finishing of automobiles belonging to them or other college personnel.

Chuck Cribb, instructor for the course, was well pleased with the progress made by his students. His pride in their success was clearly justified as evidenced by the quality of workmanship demonstrated by the students after a relatively short period of time.

Projects completed by the students ranged from minor dent repairs and touch-up painting to straightening damaged body panels and complete paint jobs. Several students who completed the program already have accepted jobs with local body repairs shops.

Southeastern offers a one-year diploma program in auto body repair for students who can enroll on a full-time basis during the day. Evening classes are available for those who cannot attend during the day. The next classes will begin on Nov. Individuals who are interested in the auto body repair program should contact Mr. Leon M. Fox, Jr., Dean of Occupational Education, at 642-7141 for additional information.

Music Studies At College Are Announced

Music Reporter 9/14

For those students interested in participating in a musical experience that will offer hours of enjoyment and relaxation, Southeastern Community College is offering guitar and piano instruction.

Various levels of instruction are available to accommodate the beginning student and the student that has been playing for years.

The programs consist of six different quarters of instruction. Interested students need no previous musical experience to be allowed to enroll in any of these classes.

Piano lessons are given twice a week, and beginning students are grouped together. The laboratory method is used which consists of eight pianos for students and a teacher's console. This is an excellent experience for beginning musicians, as they will benefit greatly from classroom discussions and group playing.

In guitar instruction, everything the student needs will be furnished at SCC including the guitars. Individualized instruction and supervised practice are also incorporated into the classroom situation.

A night class in beginning guitar will be offered this fall on Tuesday nights from 7:00 to 9:00. The class starts September 12.

There are many openings left in several of these classes, and there are a few days remaining in the registration period.

Youth Experience 'Race For Life'

An interest in educating the general public on methods of cardiopulmonary resuscitation methods is growing rapidly in the United States.

Cardiopulmonary resuscitation, also known as CPR, is a combination of artificial circulation which should be started immediately as an emergency procedure when cardiac arrest occurs by those trained to do so. It has been used widely and successfully for many years by doctors, nurses and allied health personnel.

CPR training in Columbus County got under way about one year ago. There are now 12 CPR instructors in the county and over 100 county residents have received CPR certification.

"Interest in CPR has really begun to catch on in this area," said Mrs. Joan Rhodes, executive secretary of the Columbus County chapter of the American Red Cross. "Everyone who has taken it has found it to be very rewarding."

Last Saturday through the efforts of the local Red Cross chapter and the Columbus County Extension Services a special CPR training program was held for area youth at Whiteville High School.

Approximately 20 youth attended the course which was held in conjunction with a disaster survival course.

"We want the youth to know that their services are needed in emergency situations also," Mrs. Rhodes said. "So we provided this special course for them. We hope to hold more youth training courses in the future."

The course Saturday was an abbreviated version of the overall CPR. This short course is entitled "Race For Life" and involves one person administering CPR to an adult.

"Youth have school and other activities and many do not have the time to devote to the entire CPR course," Mrs. Rhodes said. "This three-hour course gives the fundamentals of CPR but does not include two-man methods and methods for children and infants."

Leading the session were Mrs. Rhodes; J.P. Williamson, chairman of the Columbus County Red Cross Chapter; Eric Brent, director of Emergency Medical Training Services at Southeastern Community College; Dennis Johnson, division Red Cross disaster Chairman of Charlotte, John Foil, 4-H director for Columbus County Extension Services and CPR instructor; and Colon McLaurin, first aid chairman.

Several groups and organizations in the county have taken part in the course or are planning to do so. Recently, the office secretaries of the Whiteville City Schools, took the course.

"The only thing required for the course is that there be six people signed up for it," Mrs. Rhodes said. "Courses can be administered in all parts of the county."

People or groups interested in the CPR training program should contact the American Red Cross office at 642-3364.

SCC Offers Education To Adults

Southeastern Community College has long been recognized as being dedicated to offering opportunities for educational growth to people of this area. To explain how a part of the college extends this service William L. Wilson, Dean of Adult Education, talks about this department of Southeastern.

Wilson explains, "A unique feature of Southeastern Community College's Adult Education Division is its capability of offering a large variety of courses to adults beyond the walls of the institution. The Adult Ed. Division is dedicated to providing adequate educational opportunities to all adults and to providing educational solutions to civic, cultural, economic, and social problems in the area it serves." Adult education has as its purpose identifying unrealized community potentialities and unmet community needs and creating appropriate educational programs to meet these needs in cooperation with other community groups or agencies.

Wilson also states, "The Adult Education Division offers comprehensive programs of education to adults who are not initially interested in curriculum credit programs or who cannot attend these programs."

Through the "Open Door" policy of the college, the Adult Education Division is dedicated to the philosophy of offering something for all adults who are willing to spend a little of their time learning something new. A large number of special interest courses are offered which include arts and crafts, religion philosophy, music, basic education and high school completion. Occupational oriented programs are available to prepare the student for employment or to upgrade one's skills on his present job. These courses include home economics related courses, automobile mechanics, bricklaying, blueprint reading, typing, shorthand and human resource development.

Wilson adds, "Another remarkable feature of the Adult Education Program is that the courses are made available at convenient locations throughout Columbus County. The classes are located as far east as Acme-Delco and Riegelwood communities, west to Fair Bluff, south to Tabor City and north Whiteville. The idea is to make the classes available where students reside. The number of locations range from 30-40. Classes meeting in public schools, community buildings, churches, homes, business and industry and various places.

"Not only, do the Adult education courses provide learning experiences for adults, they also supply part-time teaching experience for a large number of citizens of Columbus County. Not all courses require a teacher with a four year degree. Special interest courses may be taught by someone who has learned a skill by practical experience, however, other courses do require at least a bachelorite."

Courses are offered to the students at a small registration fee of $5. The fee is charged for courses financed primarily from state funds. Exceptions to this are volunteer firemen, law enforcement officers, ambulance attendants, inmates, basic education students (grades one through eight) and persons who are 65 years old or older.

The enrollment in Southeastern s Adult Education classes will average over five thousand students per year. The college will offer an adult education class providing at least 12 students will enroll. In order to qualify for these classes, the students must by 18 years old and not enrolled in the public schools.

Any one who aspires to enroll in these programs should contact the Adult Education Office at Southeastern Community College 642-7141 ext. 30.

SCC Offers Programs For 180 Local Inmates

COLUMBUS COUNTY NEWS 11-22-78

Encouraging creativity and expanding the versatility of the inmates' skills are primary concerns for the prison officials at the Brunswick Prison Unit and for the Adult Education and Occupational Education Divisions at Southeastern Community College.

The Adult Education Division and the Occupational Education Division obtain material and provide instruction for the courses that are offered at the prison where college credit is given to the inmates who participate in the program. Besides the usual vocational courses, an equivalent to a high school diploma, the General Education Development degree (G.E.D.), and the Adult Basic Education degree (A.B.E.) can be secured by any participating inmate.

Presently, three basic vocational courses are offered to the 180 inmates. The courses include: bricklaying, small engine repair and basic quantity cooking. Vocational courses offered in the past have been plumbing and electrical wiring. On a regular basis, college transfer courses such as English, history, psychology and music are taught. Music and African culture are regularly offered as a part of the Adult Education Program in addition to the curriculum courses.

According to W.A. Mahoney, superintendent of the Brunswick Prison Unit, participation in these programs "allows the inmate to gain the knowledge necessary to become a part of the total society upon his release." Participation also serves to keep the inmate's mind occupied with constructive ideas. "It keeps the mind of the inmate off his own problems and allows him to cope with the incarceration environment," explains Mahoney.

In basic quantity cooking, for instance, inmates learn how to make dining a very pleasant experience by making meals more attractive, using special seasonings to bring out the best flavors of food, and improving sanitation. "The inmates experience high morale when the dining atmosphere is pleasant," asserts Harry Foley, supervisor of Adult Education at Southeastern Community College and former health and physical education instructor at the prison. "This helps the inmate feel that he is not in a prison environment as well as it encourages him to think constructively rather than destructively."

A major problem is that the attention span of the inmates in general is low; therefore, the teaching techniques must be adjusted to the prison environment. "There is a problem of idleness," expresses Bill Wilson, dean of the Adult Education Division at Southeastern . "It is a major objective of our program to provide the inmates with educationally stimulating instruction that will help do away with this problem."

The instructors used in these programs are more than capable of providing stimulating classroom instruction. For example, James C. Davis, associate superintendent of Whiteville City Schools, instructs the A.B.E. program while James Prevatte with eight years of teaching experience conducts classes in the G.E.D. program.

All college transfer course instructors and all vocational education course instructors are well qualified and certified to teach in their respective professions. Vangus Nichols, instructor in brick laying, has 20 years of experience in the field.

The impact of the success of this program is strongly felt by both the prison, its officials and inmates, and Southeastern Community College. There is a high level of interest among the inmates for programs such as this; the inmates benefit in the program because it tends to keep their minds occupied with constructive as well as productive ideas instead of destructive ideas which could lead to serious discipline problems.

Realizing that there is a great need to educate all people whether they are in prison or not, Southeastern Community College will continue to upgrade this program to provide more instruction so that more inmates will participate and so that its success will make it become a model to other areas that they too will follow in a similar role.

Southeastern Offers Stenoscript Course

New Reporter
12-7-78

The Adult Education Division of Southeastern Community College will offer an ABC Stenoscript (speedwriting) course beginning Tuesday, Dec. 12, and ending Tuesday, April 10, 1979. Classes will be held each Tuesday from 8:30 a.m. to 12:00 noon. No class will be held Tuesday, Dec. 26, due to the Christmas holidays.

"Based on the letters of the alphabet and common punctuation symbols, this 17 week course involves attaining the speed needed for office dictation and other note-taking situations. Because it is easy to learn and easy to write, the students can begin writing stenoscript on the first day of class instruction," an SCC spokesman said. The course is recommended for clerical personnel, but no shorthand skills are necessary. Sixty contact hours of training are involved in the course.

The classes, instructed by Beverly Chamberlin, will meet in room numbers 123 and 124 of the M Building on the SCC campus. There will be a $5 registration fee for this course, which may be paid at registration during the first class meeting. The cost of the textbook for the course will be $8.38; the workbook for the course will cost $5.50.

Anyone interested in the ABC Stenoscript course should come to the first class meeting. Pre-registration is not necessary.

Helen Jones -- A Success Story For Self, SCC

Theme Reporter 11-13-79

By ERIC McLAMB

Success is no simple matter for Helen Lenora Jones of Shallotte, North Carolina. Helen graduated from the cosmetology program at Southeastern Community College in the spring of 1977 and continued training in the program until February of 1978. This extra training allowed Helen to accumulate the 2300 contact hours of training necessary for her to be able to practice hairdressing in any state.

Graduating just wasn't enough for Mrs. Jones. Her initiative and perseverance in continuing her education enhanced her career a great deal. She was employed as an operator in the spring of 1978 by the Myrtle Beach Air Force Base beauty shop. In September, 1978, she was promoted to assistant manager of the shop.

As the only black operator at the MBAFB shop, Helen played a major role in the shop's gain in business. Since she has been there, the shop has consistently increased in sales and customers. A major asset for Mrs. Jones is the skill she acquired for styling hair of both blacks and whites.

Helen received her management training as well as cosmetology training from Southeastern Community College. She gives a great deal of credit to her instructors who offered moral support. "The instruction in the cosmetology lab was outstanding and prepared me well for this position," she added. Mrs. Jones also stated that competition in national and state hair shows and competition in hairstyling among other schools also helped her qualify for the position.

But some internal force won't let Helen settle for the success she has already had. She plans to return to Southeastern Community

Helen Lenora Jones

College in the spring of 1979 to obtain an instructor's license which will require her to work for one year in on-the-job training, to perform classwork for three months, and finally to take the state board examination for certification. Her instruction will be supervised by Mrs. Audra Smith and Mrs. Betty Jo Walters, instructors in the cosmetology program at SCC.

Helen's career is vigorous, but she allows plenty of time to be a good mother and wife. She is a proud mother of a 4-year-old son, Gary Leon Jones, Jr., and a 6-year-old daughter, Tonia M. Jones. She is devoted to her husband, Gary Leon Jones, Sr., who strongly supports her endeavor.

Where will Helen Jones go after obtaining her instructor's license? With her training and determination it is certain that she can go nowhere but up the ladder of success. As a successful business woman, student, mother and wife, Mrs. Jones stands as a credit to her community, to her family, and to Southeastern Community College.

PAs Locate In Whiteville

Why would two young career health professionals want to locate in Whiteville?

For two young people the answers are home and vocation.

Earl Haddock and Suzi Hughes, physician's assistants (PAs) in Whiteville, listed those as the most important reasons, along with job availability and North Carolina laws which help PAs.

Haddock and Hughes work at the Southeast Internal Medicine Group in Baldwin Woods, Haddock with Dr. John Kelly and Hughes with Dr. John Munroe.

For Haddock the choice was at least partly sentimental. "North Carolina is home, and I wanted to stay in North Carolina," he said. "The people around here -- I was really impressed with hospitality of the people in this area, and this was my first choice."

Hughes said she likes the area too, and added a professional comment: "Bowman Gray's program (where she studied) really encourages its students to work in rural areas, where the PA program is designed to work -- primary care types of employment. I feel like I'm contributing something to the community, and it's a fine place to live."

The two came to Whiteville this fall. They are not the first PAs in Columbus County (there are two in Chadbourn) but they are the first in Whiteville. There is also a nurse practitioner with the medical group here.

Haddock had been in the area before, when he was a student at Southeastern Community College. Originally from Ayden, he called Wilmington home for the past 15 years. After high school he served two years of active duty in the US Navy as a hospital corpsman, spending a year in Spain on hospital duty and a year in Italy with a flight squadron.

Afterward, though remaining in the Naval Reserve for several years, he attended SCC, and then the University of North Carolina at Wilmington, where he earned his bachelorate in biology. He later received a bachelorate in health science from Duke University, as part of his two-year physician's assistant studies.

He completed the Duke program of 24 consecutive months of training in July, 1978. He first came to Whiteville about six months ago, and has been with Dr. Kelly for about four months. He is married, and his wife Pam is the decorating consultant with Sherwin-Williams in Whiteville.

Hughes is originally from Indianapolis, Ind. She received her bachelor's degree in nursing from the University of Indiana. She entered the PA program at Wake Forest University's Bowman-Gray School of Medicine after practicing five years as a nurse in Indiana and Atlanta, Ga.

She completed the program (also 24 consecutive months of work-study) in August, and began working with Dr. Munroe full time in early October.

For each the first experience in Whiteville was a preceptorship, a sort of internship or on - the - job - training for a PA. As Hughes said, "It's a time when you can try the program out, try the doctors out, and the doctors can try you out. Sort of a time to learn the program without obligation to either party."

The work experience in Whiteville, added to the other attractions they felt to the area, led to the decision to locate in Whiteville when the positions with the medical group became available.

One more thing they liked was North Carolina law with regard to physician's assistants.

PAs, while not doctors, have considerably more training than nurses. They assist the doctors in a number of ways. As Haddock said, "We make rounds in the morning and see every patient in the morning with the doctors. After the rounds, if there are any special procedures, we assist the doctors. During the day we do 'walk-in' patients (non-critical cases, such as general examinations). We see patients from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., and in the afternoon we make the rounds on our patients, she (Hughes) on Munroe's, I on Kelly's."

Or, as Hughes put it, "We give a synopsis of what has happened during the day. Anyone we see that we think their condition warrants the doctor seeing them before the next morning, we inform the doctor and he makes a second check."

They also do "work-ups" for the day, including histories, updating personal medical records, or routine examinations such as pulse and blood pressure. They said an average day is 14 to 16 hours long.

"It's important that people have some idea of why we're here and what we do," Hughes said. "We aren't just assistants. We make decisions. The doctors rely on our decisions, and feel comfortable with our decisions."

And that is why North Carolina law is significant.

"The North Carolina laws, I guess, have just been through the process enough to sort of 'fine tune' it," Hughes said.

"They have been around longer than in any other state," Haddock said.

"Many still have their first laws on the books, and ours have been refined," Hughes added.

They said the laws here allow them to better serve community medical needs by allowing them to do all that a PA can do.

"It's more of an understanding than just knowing how to treat colds," Hughes said. "It's that knowing how to make decisions that makes the program 24 long months.

"Under North Carolina law there is a formulary of drugs that we can write prescriptions for after certification and due process. The drugs in the formulary are pretty much the primary care drugs.

"We do not write prescriptions for controlled substances, narcotics or tranquilizers. North Carolina is one of nine states with prescriptive privilege for physician's assistants," she said.

Because of the state laws and because of what they are allowed to do, Haddock and Hughes said they think they are helping to improve medical care in the area. They said that one reason was that their preliminary work with patients allows the doctors to spend more time with those patients who really need to see a doctor because of an immediate medical problem.

"I think it's the difference between spending 20 minutes with a patient and two minutes," Hughes said. "I think it's a matter of the difference in quality of time spent with the patient, and I think the patients appreciate that."

Both also seemed pleased with their work.

"I'm very excited about the PA profession," Haddock said. "It's been a long-time goal of mine. I really like working in North Carolina, and I enjoy being in Whiteville."

"I guess the first two months out of school I've been probably happier in my work here than I have been in a long time," Hughes said. "Job satisfaction is a big part of what I get out of life. I've been more than pleased with my role here and what I thought it would be."

Splawn Working With State Agency

News Reporter 9-21-78

Acquiring an important -- or even prestigious -- secretarial position is usually considered quite an accomplishment by those with secretarial training.

A 1974 graduate of the secretarial technology program at Southeastern Community College, Miss Splawn is secretary to Dr. R. Jean Overton, assistant director of the Program Development Division with the North Carolina Department of Community Colleges, State Board of Education, in Raleigh.

Since taking the job in July of 1974, Miss Splawn has assisted Dr. Overton in working with 57 community colleges and technical institutes with curriculum development and-or revision of programs in the areas of business, English and educational technology.

She graduated from SCC with an associate in applied science degree in secretarial technology. She said she thought the secretarial program at SCC was well constructed and that it had been very valuable in helping her obtain the knowledge and skills she said a secretary must have.

Originally from Whitevile, she said she attended SCC because it was close by, and because it offered a good program in secretarial technology.

Miss Splawn is the daughter of A.L. Splawn of Whiteville and Ann Splawn of Allendale, S.C. She has a sister, Marjorie, who attended Southeastern and is presently living and working in Allendale, S.C., and a brother, Terry, who is serving in the U.S. Army in Kentucky.

While Miss Splawn's work (her first job experience since graduating from SCC) keeps her busy, she says she still finds time to devote to herself. She owns two kittens, Kathy and Katie, and devotes a lot of time to them, as well as to growing and caring for various types of plants. She said she also enjoys reading and taking weekend trips to the beaches.

Of her secretary, Dr. Overton said, "Brenda is a very deserving person and a credit to her home town and to Southeastern."

WINNING YEAR-END MOVE: HOW TO TAKE ADVANTAGE OF 1979's NEW TAX LAW BREAKS ON THIS YEAR'S SALES

Are you about to sell some real estate, some closely held corporate stock, or maybe part of your business? Well, DON'T — at least not until you've read this. With a little ingenuity and the right moves, you can accomplish some real dollars - and - cents wonders. You can make the sale now — at your price — and cash in one the tax breaks due to take effect next year (assuming the expected happens: the tax bill now in the Senate becomes law this October). How? By selling on the installment plan. And it's a can't-lose proposition. Reason: Even if the tax bill doesn't become law, you still come out ahead with the tax-cutting installment sale approach.

Typical situation: Let's say you bought a small parcel of raw land several years ago for $20,000. You'd like to sell it and you have a buyer who is ready, willing and able. There's also been a meeting of the minds as to price — $50,000. But there's one problem: The buyer wants to close the deal now and take possession this year. But you're reluctant to forego the benefits promised for next year under the pending new tax law.

(2)Also knocked out would be the up-to-20 percent higher tax on slary or other earnings that can result from capital gain profits.

(3)There would be an across-the-board slash in individual income taxes.

Is there any way you can sell now and still take advantage of pending Tax Law breaks? Answer: Sure there is. Here's what to do: Go ahead and close your sale now. But don't take more than 30 percent of the sales price this year. Just take a down-payment now — the balance in 1979. This will qualify your sale for installment treatment with these spectacular results.

You get the price you've bargained for, but the lion's share of the gain won't be taxed until you receive it in 1979. And the pending new law says the installment payments received in 1979 — even for pre-'79 sales — will qualify for the new tax breaks. So you cash in on this year's top sale prie under next year's favorable tax rules. You're a big winner no matter how you look at it. How big? Here's an example.

Let's assume you're married and have a taxable income of $40,000 a year. If you sell and take the full $50,000 in proceeds this year, you will owe $9,904 in regular taxes on your profit. And you will also owe $1,455 — 15 percent added tax on capital gain — for a total tax bite of $11,359. On the other hand, if you take $5,000 now and defer the rest until, say, January, the total tax bite over the two years will be only $9,443 (there will be no 15 percent added tax). In other words — by waiting three months for your cash, you're almost sure to save $2,000 in taxes.

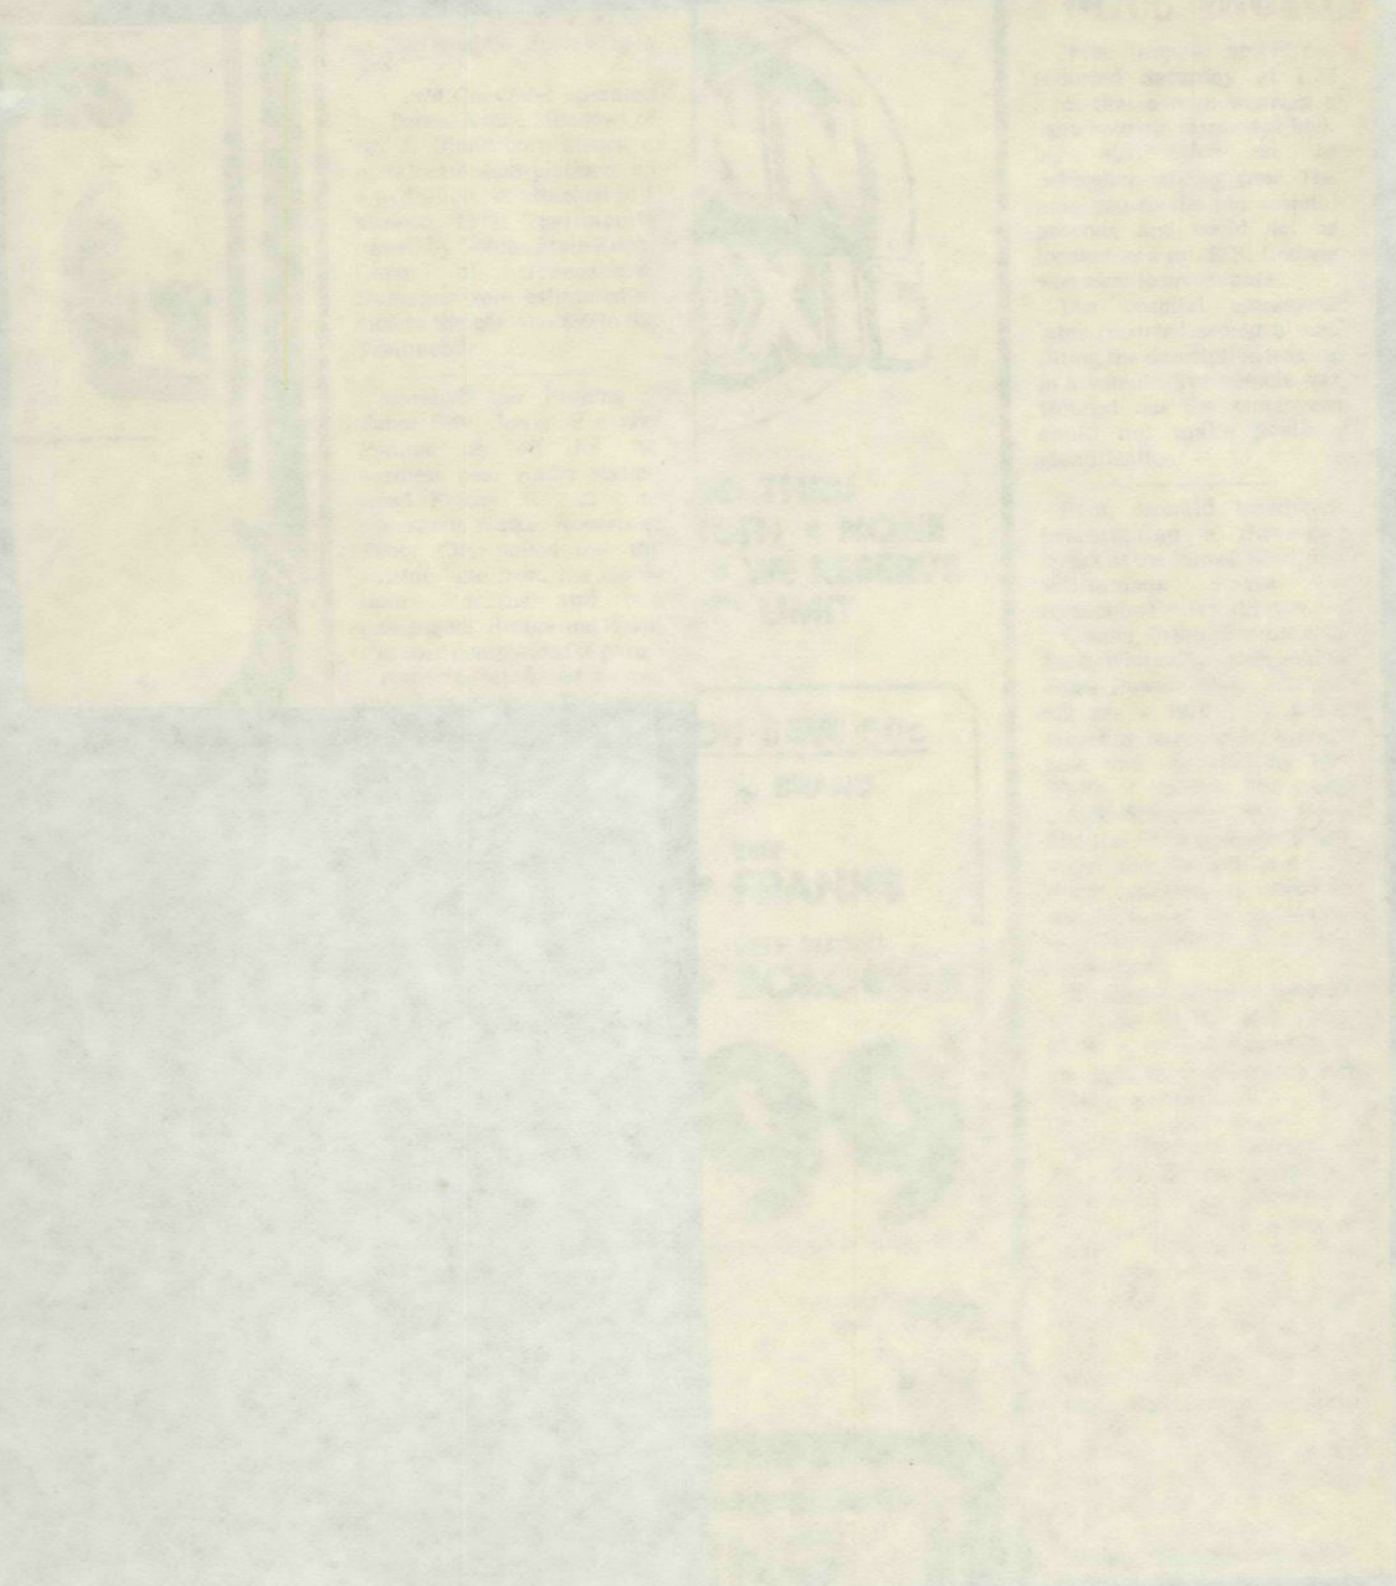
"Well," you say, "it certainly sounds good — but there's one little hitch: I need a good-sized chunk of that cash now. Does that knock the entire idea into a cocked hat?"

Answer: Not at all. As we said, you can get as much as 30 percent of the selling price this year — in our example, $15,000 — and still qualify for installment sale treatment on the rest. And if that's not enough, there's a way to get more. Here's what to do.

Borrow on the real estate up to the amount of your tax basis. Here, that's $10,000. Let your buyer assume your mortgage. Just as long as the mortgage doesn't exceed your basis, none of it will be considered a "payment" — it won't count toward the 30 percent.

The impact of this installment sale strategy will, of course, vary from investor to investor. For example, the savings will be biggest for high-salaried investors (more than $55,200 of earned income on a joint return). The new Tax Law would repeal the up-to-20 percent higher tax on salary income produced by capital gain profits.

On the other hand, some high-income investors may actually benefit by taking all the cash this year — by not going the installment sale route. These will generally be investors who are in an over - 50 percent tax bracket (more than $55,200 taxable income) who don't have much earned income. How could they be better off? Because the 25 percent alternative tax on the first $50,000 of capital gains would be repealed starting in 1979.



SCC Foundation Honors J. Herman Leder Saturda

Mr. J. Herman Leder has been selected as Honorary Chairman of the SCC Foundation Dinner-Theatre to be held Saturday evening, April 1st on the college campus. Proceeds of the annual fundraising event are used to further the work of the Foundation.

Mr. Leder's success in business is an outstanding example of the rewards of hard work and sound management. What began as a young Austrian boy's dream of coming to America has in 53 years become the two state, 11-store chain of Leder Brothers, Inc.

At 17, J. Herman Leder arrived in Marion, S.C., speaking no English and aspiring to success in business, with a strong belief in family and education and a determination to improve not only his own situation but that of those around him.

An uncle put him to work in a department store in Marion where, for the next four and a half years, he acquired training in merchandising, simultaneously acquiring his high school diploma.

Ready to begin his own venture at 21, he began looking for a setting; he selected Vineland, then a village of several hundred people a mile south of Whiteville. Whiteville was the county seat; Vineland was on the main line of the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad.

Convinced that the area's future lay in "good land and good farmers," Leder with his brother Morris began preparation for the first Leders Brothers store. On June 20, 1925 they opened for business.

Those were days when steak was 30 cents a pound, when 15 cents bought a yard of calico and a 325-acre farm was selling for $8,000. Despite the comparatively low prices business was good, and the brothers were soon ready to expand. In the late 20s, Morris leder moved to Clinton to open the second store.

In 1930, J. Herman Leder married Yetta Leinwand of Marion, who was to become the mother of their five children and a business partner as well.

The depression brought hard times to North Carolina farmers. Recalls Herman Leder, "We didn't see any $5 bills for two or three years. Because of the cheap prices farmers were paid for their crops, money disappeared." But by 1933 Leder had paid off his debts , giving credit to Franklin Roosevelt for "having confidence in the people and getting the people to have confidence in themselves."

Today there are 11 stores in the Leder Brothers chain: Whiteville, Clinton, Smithfield, Jacksonville, Mount Olive, Tabor City, Lumberton, and Concord in North Carolina; Marion, Loris, and Conway in South Carolina.

"Shop With Confidence; Wear With Pride" - The Leder Brothers slogan reflects 53 years of success in business. Important factors have been regular and planned advertising backed up by good merchandising, courteous service, attractive window and store displays and customer confidence.

"We have built our reputation through the years on maintaining fair and dependable stores. We will certainly do all in our power to maintain that reputation through the years to come," remarked Herman Leder ont the occasion of the stores' 50th anniversary in 1975.

We have no special formula for building and maintaining a successful business except hard work and sound management, and my wife has certainly contributed a great deal to both these factors."

Business: A Family Idea- J. Herman Leder and brothers Joseph of Clinton of Samuel of Jacksonville continue their business affiliation. Morris Leder, co-founder of the original store, has formed his own organization with brother Leon of Wilson and brother-in-law Julius Segerman of Jacksonville.

The Philosophy - From the very beginning, the Leder business goal was one of real community involvement, of becoming one with the people the business sought to serve. In advance of the opening of the Mount Olive store for example, J. Herman Leder set up a $500 annual scholarship fund to Mount Olive College, a fund which 10 years later continues.

The Belief In Education - In addition to their own five children, the Leders have found ways to assist others in pursuit of more education. Yearly, the Herman Leder Scholarship awards a $1,000 grant to a Whiteville High School graduate on the basis of need and academic potential.

Because one of the first recipients had financial difficulty continuing college after the first year, the Yetta Leder Loan Fund was begun by Mrs. Herman Leder and is administered by Southeastern Community College.

Firm in his conviction to help those who are willing to help themselves, Mr. Herman Leder finds his educational assistance "more mportant to me than the stores." He treasure a collection of letters from peole who have benefited from his efforts.

Continuing his community interest, he was for 14 years a member of the Whiteville Board of Education and is perennial chairman of the United Jewish Appeal for his district. Mr. Leder was appointed to the Board of Trustees of Southeastern Community College in 1969 and is presently serving his second 8 year term. In 1969 he was also appointed to the Board of Directors to the SCC Foundation and served as Vice-President of the newly established organization. Mr. Leder is still an active member of the board.

He is also a member of Rotary, a Shriner, a 32 degree Mason and co-founder of the Jewish Home for the Aged in Clemmons, N.C.

On June 7, 1971, at the North Carolina Merchants Association meeting held in Pinehurst, Mr. Leder was presented the Retailer of the Year award in conjuction with the North Carolina Association of Broadcasters.

On June 18, 1971, a joint resolution was passed by the Department of State General Assembly of the State of North Carolina, under Resolution 83 - a joint resolution in recognition of contributions of J. Herman Leder.

In other business, he was a founder of First National Bank, Columbus National Bank and WENC radio.

Leder Park is named in his honor. He and Ms. Leder gave the site and are benefactors of the Whiteville Library.

The Women's Center at Southeastern Community College has been open for three weeks. First time visitors are sometimes curious and hesitant, since they do not know exactly what a Women's Center is. On opening day 40 to 50 women visited the Center. Located on the SCC campus, the Center is a place for adult, female students to gather between classes to study, visit, wait or read. Student counselors are also available for those who seek their services.

Each Wednesday at 12:20 p. m. special programs are presented in the Center. The programs deal with topics of interest to women, featuring speakers, slide tape presentations and discussion groups. Suggestions for programs are welcome.

Women visiting the Center stress the importance of having a place to gather. So often non - traditional students feel left out or out of place in a regular college setting. Many feel that having a place to meet and talk to each other about their goals and interest gives them encouragement. Finding approval and support for continuing education is extremely valuable to a student who has been out of school for a period of time.

Those working with the Center welcome women of the college and the community to visit the Women's Center. For further information call the college, 642-7141.

Correctional education plan launched

Wilmington Morning Star

WHITEVILLE — Mrs. Lela Chesson of Whiteville has been hired to direct a new reading and mathematics tutoring center, School Superintendent Sam Stell said Wednesday.

Mrs. Chesson was approved as director of the center by the board of education at its monthly meeting Tuesday.

Whiteville city schools are among several in the state which have received funds from the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act (CETA) to establish a tutoring center.

The town has received a $34,000 grant to hire three people to staff the center. Mrs. Chesson will be assited by an instructional aide and a clerical aide, who have not yet been hired, Stell said.

Mrs. Chesson is currently a reading, math, and English tutor at Southeastern Community College. Previously she taught high school English at Rocky Mount High School. From 1972 to 1976, she was family editor of the Rocky Mount Evening Telegraph. From 1970 to 1972, she was director of the learning lab at Nash Technical Institute at Rocky Mount.

"I'm very pleased," Stell said. "Mrs. Chesson is highly qualified to direct the program."

The center, which will operate year-round, will serve 60 students, who will meet in groups of 10 several times a week. Six class sessions will be scheduled each day.

"The intent of CETA is to get people into the labor force," said Jerry Beaver, deputy assitant state superintendent of public instruction. "This program is to help prepare students to go out and get a job."

Beaver said the program is designed to be corrective rather than remedial.

Consequently, he said, when recommending students for the correctional program, teachers would select those students who showed some potential for improving reading and writing skills over those who "could not read at all."

Beaver said although the program is not connected with competency testing it shoudl help prepare students for the tests, which will be administered for the first time in April.

State Reaffirms SCC Accreditation

Columbus County 4-12-78

The accreditation of Southeastern Community College was reaffirmed Thursday during the monthly meeting of the State Board of Education.

Also receiving reaffirmation was Lenoir Community College while Anson and Mayland technical institutes received initial accreditation.

The approval of these institutions makes a total of 55 which have received initial accreditation and 17 which have received reaffirmation.

Dr. Ron McCarter, president of Southeastern, explained that the community colleges are visited by survey teams every five year for purposes of reaffirmations, and on the tenth year for reaccreditation.

Southeastern is also accredited by the Southern Association of Schools and Colleges and is surveyed every 10 years, Dr. McCarter said.

Local Road Needs Cited At Chadbourn Public Meet

Tabor City Tribune 7-5-78

Improvements on state and U.S. highways in the Tabor City area were called for at a public hearing held at Southeastern Community College near Chadbourn Thursday.

State Senator R.C. Soles, Jr. asked that N.C. 410 from Chadbourn to U.S. 701 near here be improvedm and State Rep. Richard Wright cited N.C. 410, N.C. 904, and N.C. 130 as needing widening and straightening.

Town Commissioner Willard Wright suggest that improvements be made on state roads in the city.

Soles stated that traffic on 410 is especially heavy on weekends due to beach-bound traffic from the Piedmont, and Rep. Wright explained that 904 from Tabor City to Pireway is "in terrible shape." He said that if the roads cited as needing improvements were better utilized, they ease the burden placed on other roads by beach traffic. He also added that 701 from New Hope to Whiteville is rapidly deteriorating, and that other streches of 701 are in need of repair.

In reference to N.C. highways 410, 904 and 130, Wright said "I don't call for four-laning them, especially as they pass through heavily populated areas that four-laning would damage," He did say, however, that all are important connector roads and are "fairly narrow and have more and more traffic all the time."

Soles noted that 701 will soon be carrying heavier traffic due to the new four-lane road, presently being built in South Carolina near Loris.

Tabor City Town Commissioner Willard Wright told Department of Transportation(DOT) planners that state roads in the city are in need of work. He cited three streets that needed widening and curb and guttering. He added that motorists are unable to pull off 410 in places due to lack of shoulders and the narrowness of the road.

Columbus County Commissioner David McPherson of Clarendon recommended the four-laning of U.S. 76 from Chadbourn to the South Carolina line to meet the four-lane highway already existent there. Soles called for the speedy completion of the four-lane section of 74-76 from Bolton to Hallsboro.

Arthur Williamson, district highway commissioner, chaired the meeting which was held to solicit citizens' comments on what the needs are for the state's long-range highway planning program. Representatives from Columbs, Bladen, Cumberland, Robeson and Harnett counties attended the meeting.

"We are talking about 1985 when we talk about adding projects to the system," explained DOT Chief of Planning W.F. Caddell, Jr. "It is normally seven years for implementation of a project."

Caddell added that the Chadbourn hearing was one of 14 being held in different locations across the state. "They are being held to obtain imput from local officials on what they consider the principal needs of their areas and what projects they think should be added to the system," he sa

North Carolina Department of Transportation (NCDOT) officials will conduct a public meeting in Chadbourn to provide area residents with an opportunity to participate in the annual update of the State's Highway Improvement Program.

Scheduled for 2 p.m. next Thursday, June 29, the meeting will be held at Southeastern Community College located on NC-130 east of Chadbourn.

Division 6, which emcompasses Bladen, Columbus, Cumberland, Harnett, and Robeson Counties, is represented on the North Carolina Board of Transportation by Arthur Williamson of Chadbourn. Williamson, who will chair the meeting, said, "This important meeting provides our region with the opportunity to make area transportation needs known to the Board of Transportation."

"It represents our commitment to fully involve the general public as well as the local leadership in planning for future highway improvements," commented Jeanette Carl, at-large Board member from Division 6.

The Highway Improvement Program is a planned and programmed course for highway construction that balances anticipated revenues against estimated highway project costs in the coming years.

The Chadbourn meeting is one of 14 scheduled throughout the State to provide maximum possible citizen participation in the planning process to improve the North Carolina highway system.

The Highway Improvement Program is the department's basic planning document and includes projects on North Carolina's rural primary and urban highways (generally US and NC numbered highways).

"These meetings are a key element in our State's partnership with the local communities in building a better North Carolina for all of our citizens," said Secretary of Transportation Thomas W. Bradshaw, Jr. "We encourage and actively seek public participation in these meetings. I have instructed my staff to record all public comment at these meetings so that the suggestions and concerns voiced by the citizenry can be reported to the full Transportation Board for its consideration," concluded Bradshaw.

Elizabeth is the Visiting Artist at SCC for this year, and Jonothan is a part-time instructor of theory and piano at the college. They met in undergraduate school at Ohio Wesleyan University, where they both studied piano and did some piano-duo work together. Between 1974 and 1978 they attended the University of Maryland where they both received Master of Music degrees in piano, and began the doctoral degree program. They have recently played much four-hand piano literature together and plan to do their doctoral recording thesis jointly on the four-hand piano sonatas of the twentieth century.

This recital of music by Schubert consists of a German Dance, the Fantasy in F minor, the Rhondo in D major, and three military marches. The Maisonpierres will show some slides and talk on the background of Schubert and the piano duet. An evening of music such as this, during Schubert's lifetime, was called a "Schubertiade". Come to this recital and be a part of an 1825 musical setting. Admission is free and open to the public. There will be refreshments after the recital.

Store Operator, Construction Firm Have Temporary Standoff

News Reporter 7-10-78

By THOM H. BILLINGTON

Hwy. 76 near Chadbourn was the site of a Mexican standoff last Friday as a Wilmington-based construction company was forced to a stand still by the operator of a small store.

Harold Norris, operator of The College Center, said the attitude of some of the firm's personnel is what determined him to battle the company.

The College Center, which lies along the right-of-way for a sewer line being installed by Sneeden Inc. for Southeastern Community College, has two driveways connecting it to Hwy. 76. As the trenching operation approached Norris' store, he became alarmed that the construction work would close his business.

"They told me they were going to come through here on Friday, come h — l or high water," Norris said Friday morning. So, he parked his pickup truck along the inside edge of the right-of-way, after measuring 30 feet from the center of the highway.

"They called the Highway Patrol down here this morning," he continued. "The patrolman measured it and said I was not in the right-of-way." Norris noted that although the company men did not work Friday morning or early afternoon, they parked a crane within the right-of-way to block one of his driveways.

"They offered me $50 a day for every day I was closed and I said I would take it," the rangy, rugged store operator said. "But when they told me they would not re-pave my driveways after tearing them up, the deal was off. We haven't had any hard words. I've let them use my phone. Now, they've got a truck out there parked so it blocks my sign."

"They are going to hurt me. They leave the dirt piled high. I'm going to fight them all the way ... our land runs another 300 to 400 yards down the highway."

At about 3 p.m. Friday afternoon, the crane began digging dirt. A front-end loader was in the highway, pushing the dirt off the pavement as it was dumped by the crane and traffic was being held back while the machine was in the road.

"Keep that dirt pushed back," the crane operator called to the driver of the front-end loader. "I don't care if that traffic backs up to South Carolina. The h--l with it!"

Company personnel are no longer using Norris' telephone. Norris said Monday the telephone company has loaned them a test 'phone to use while they cut along the area where an underground cable is located.

The crane is moving very slowly alongside Norris' pickup. "They can work with my truck parked there, but it's going to be hard. The lawyer says they will have to pay me for everything I lose, everything in the way of damages." Norris' truck is aparently going to be a constant companion to the crane as the work continues eastward along the highway towards the college.

There was still one driveway open to Norris' store early Monday, but the building was hardly visible from the highway because of equipment and piles of dirt.

A Southeastern Community College official acknowledged the firm has had difficulties along the entire route from the Chadbourn waste treatment plant.

The line being installed by the Wilmington firm will connect the college to the Chadbourn plant with Community Development funds granted last year to Columbus County.

Legion Auxiliaries Give Scholarships

A Gold Star Mother is one who has lost a son in service. Mrs. Fore's son was Lieutenant James Dixon Fore, who died December 22, 1943, in a plane crash.

Mrs. Smith said, "The gift to the college is an annual event. The money is to be used to assist a student who would not otherwise be able to attend school."

FT. BRAGG — Southeastern Community College's Rams women cagers had their pending game with Durham College in Durham postponed a week and, instead, competed in the weekend Fort Bragg Women's Invitational Tournament where they dropped decisions to Norfolk Naval Base, 65-59 and to the potent N.C. The Lady Rams are now due to play at Durham the coming Friday, January 27, at 6 p.m. Durahm comes here on Jan. 30 in the ensuing SCC femme outing.

In the first game the Rams played in the double-elimination event here, Linda Rogers led the Whiteville crew with a 20-point show, followed by Dale Nealy with 16 and Frances Small with 13. Selvy hit 35, Carlisle 14 for the Naval Base from Virginia. In the last game for the Rams, Rogers had 10 points, Jackie Cunningham 10 for them and A & T's tourney favorites had Jones with 17, Henderson and L. Southeastern Presents Its Lady Rams Cagers, Newest Addition

By PHYLLIS BLACKWELL

WHITEVILLE — Southeastern Community College is proud to present the Lady Rams in their first season of basketball competition.

The ladies of the college are playing their initial year in the uniform of SCC and are under the eye of Coach Susan Harmuth, director of RSVP at Southeastern and a graduate of Radford, Va. College where she was a physical education major and a varsity cager for three seasons.

Susan expressed full confidence in the new team. She stated, "There is a lot of talent on our team. They are new in the business (sport), and, of course, we started late, but they have improved a lot and they're getting better every day."

The squad is a small one, with only nine girls participating. They practice for two hours a day four days a week. However, they are enjoying it and seem to be thriving under Coach Harmuth's philosophy, "Everyone who comes to practice gets to play. If they work, they play!"

Captains Dale Nealy, former four-time All-Columbus and former All-East Cape Fear 1-A Conference player from Williams and Clarendon and Linda Rogers, who won conference honors while playing for her home school of Orrum, are responsible for leadership on the court. They also assist in keeping enthusiasm and morale up.

The women's basketball team of Southeastern has been made to feel right at home by the members of the men's Rams team, since they have been well received. The male members have been very supportive and really cheer the girls' on.

Other members of the femme outfit — the first girls' basketball team to represent SCC — besides Co-Captains Rogers and Nealy are Frances Small, Jennifer McLean, Jackie Cunningham, Jo Lynn Smith, and Jackie Pierce of Whiteville; Laura Williamson of Cerro Gordo; and Wanda Sinclair of Lumberton.

The Lady Rams have a 1-5 record in their first half-dozen games, but this record does not tell their true value. They defeated Durham College's club here, Jan. 30, 57-51, but they've had other games that could have been their's as well as turning into losses. Especially true were the defeats at Fort Bragg on Dec. 14, 65-59, at Lenoir Community College on Jan. 10, 68-60; and their opening game in the Ft. Bragg Invitational Tournament, Jan. 20, when they bowed to Norfolk, Va. Naval Base's women, 65-59. Each of these they led, but faltered prior to the closing horn.

The Lady Rams have four more games on their first schedule, including Lenoir Community College here, tonight (Monday) at 6 p.m.; Mount Olive College, here on Feb. 13; and at Fayetteville State College, Feb. 15; and the visit to Durham College, scheduled the past Thursday night, postponed due to inclement weather,to be rescheduled.

Incidentally, all of the three games remaining here and the Fayetteville State visit will find the Lady Rams playing with their "brother" team in twin-bills.

So, all in all, the Lady Rams of Southeastern haven't just made the local college's basketball program an easier one on the eye, but it's also helped to make it a better all-around presentation. 1:37 up

MEET THE RAMS!

Donald Cid, the 6' 2" sophomore forward for the Rams of Southeastern Community College, is playing a top reserve role this year, according to head coach Harry Foley. Cid, a native of St. Thomas, Virgin Islands, plays very well coming off the bench. "He's a spark plug," asserts Foley. "He can really pick up the team and lead a scoring spree."

Cid is a stronger rebounder and is very effective in starting the fast break. As a part-time starter on last year's squad, Cid averaged six points per game as well as six rebounds per game. According to Foley, Cid is one of his best players in playing under pressure. "He's good in pressure situations; he's very mature and never loses his cool."

Devoted to the team concept, Cid is expected to lead the team especially during close games. "If we play together as a team, we should have a great season," Cid stated. "It's going to take a lot of hustle and a lot of team play."

"Our problem so far has been that we're not playing as well as we should as a team," Foley states reflecting on the Ram's first five games. The Rams, 1-4 overall and 0-1 in the conference, have played well in spurts but not consistently. When the Rams played the Duke Jayvees in the season's opener, they led by ten points at half-time, but lost the game by seven points due to the team's ragged ball playing against Duke's rugged half-court zone press.

However, as the season gets well underway, the team should be playing very well together as they showed in their recent victory over the North Carolina Central Jayvees. The SCC cagers will play Davidson Community College on Friday, December 15th, at Davidson and Lenoir Community College the following night at Lenoir before the holidays and will not play again until January 4th when they meet Davidson Community College again in the Whiteville High School gymnasium.

Southeastern Male Cagers Seek More Consistency In Full Game

News Reporter

12-28-78

By ERIC McLAMB

Despite a 2-5 overall record (0-2 in the conference), the Rams of Southeastern Community College will expect to begin a string of victories when they resume cage action in January.

Plagued with injuries and sickness, the SCC cagers posted a 83-70 win over Davidson Community College during their last weekend of basketball for 1978. However, they dropped an important conference game to Lenoir Community College by two points, 78-80, during the same weekend. According to head coach Harry Foley, they should have won that game despite being without the assistance of two starters, Noland Pearsall and George McKoy, and top reserve, Donald Cid.

"Our major weakness is inexperience," Foley stated. "This lack of experience is resulting in excessive turnovers, and this is what is hurting us the most."

Consistency is also a problem with the Rams. "The boys have played extremely well at times, but they haven't been consistent about it," Foley explains. Foley noted that against the Duke Jayvees, his team's consistent play in the first half gave them a 10 point halftime lead only to lose the game due to inexperienced offensive play.

Foley also observed that his cagers played their best game against the North Carolina Central Jayvees which was their only home game thus far. For Foley, the fact that ten of the remaining eighteen regular season games are at home is a plus.

The Rams definitely have a potent scoring attack as indicated by the overall conference record. SCC has scored an average of 86.3 points per game with three players placing in the top ten in scoring. Forward George Murphy is second in the conference with 18.6 points per game while Guards Mike Southerland and Charles Webb are fifth and eighth with 17.9 and 15.6 points per game respectively. Charles Webb is the only SCC player placing in the top ten in field goal percentage with a 60 per cent average and placing third.

"We still have a good shot at winning the conference title," Foley stated. He indicated that a record of 4-2 would probably win the conference.

WINGATE — Southeastern Community College's Rams dropped a pair of decisions to the Wingate Bulldogs baseballers here, Monday, losing 6-2 in the opener; falling in the nightcap, 5-4.

In the opener, Andy Robinson hurled well in going the distance, but fell victim to at least three hits by the winners that resulted from his mates losing fly-balls in the sun, hits that should have been caught otherwise. Bobby Hoffman doubled in this game for SCC, Wingate's Third-Baseman Jerry Carter hit 2 for 3, one a double.

The same thing happened to Gary (Beaver) Oxendine in the nightcap except that his team made 5 errors to go with the two hits Wingate had off him. In the fifth frame, when Wingate scored all its runs, two were out when two errors followed by 1st-Baseman Ron Grout's 3-run homer produced over half the Bulldog markers.

Doug West hit an RBI triple in this game for SCC. The Rams host Ferrum, Va. Junior College at Southeastern's field in Whiteville, Friday at 1 p.m. in two tilts.

SOUTHEASTERN COMMUNITY COLLEGE — Coach Danny Bryant's West Columbus Vikings tennis team continued its progress here, Monday, downing Whiteville's Wolfpack, 5-4, in an important Three Rivers 3-A Conference meeting.

Bryant's crew won by taking four of the six singles matches, since Whiteville came back strong to capture two of the three doubles events. Southeastern was playing without one of its top performers, James Callihan, out with a knee ailment.

The result left West Columbus 4-1 near the top of the TRC race, while it also enabled the Vikings to even up overall at 4-4. Whiteville is 3-2 in the TRC race. West Columbus plays at East Bladen, Friday.

SCC Gets Lady Coach

Robesonian 1-8-78

WHITEVILLE — Chances are better than good that there's no generation gap in the life of Susan Lynn Harmuth of the Southeastern Community College staff . . .

Because the native of Parsippany, N.J. came here to become Director of the Columbus County Retired Senior Volunteer Program, better known alphabetically as RSVP.

And, she is also the coach of Southeastern's Lady Rams, women's basketball team. It's the first such team for the distaff members of the local college's student body; playing intercollegiately, that is.

Susan Harmuth is well-qualified for both her positions at ECC, too. The personable miss was a former high school and college star as a player in basketball. After graduating from Parsippany Hills High School, where she played regularly as a schoolgirl athlete, she was awarded an athletic scholarship following her senior season.

She attended Radford College at Radford, Va. and currently holds a bachelor of science degree with a Health and Physical Education major and is also working toward a matter of science with a major in Educational Administration and a minor in Recreation.

While at Radford, she was a member of the Women's Varsity Basketball Team for three seasons, also played on the Women's Varsity Volleyball for a season. As a wing-forward, Susan played on a Radford team that was second in the state of Virginia in both her sophomore and junior years. She was voted the Best Defensive Player Award while there.

She also had other college honors; among them being named to Who's Who In American Colleges and Universities; was selected as Most Outstanding Health and Physical Education Major in her class; was on the Dean's List; and served as both president and vice-president of the Radford Physical Education Majors Club.

Besides her athletic career there, Coach Harmuth's other activities at Radford included being a member of the Physical Education Majors Club; the Recreation Association; was chairman of the Continuing Education program at Radford; and others.

Coach Harmuth noted that her girls, SCC's Lady Rams, had lost their first two games, played prior to the holiday vacation and said, "I look forward to giving the embers of the team the chance to play basketball on the college level, something that has never been offered here before. My philosophy is practice and play and you'll get better and enjoy it, too."

She said that, whereas the men's basketball teams of SCC and others in their classification have formed the new Eastern Tar Heel Junior College Conference in the state, she does not expect that right away among women's teams of the loop. "Maybe later!" was her comment.

In her post as director of RSVP in Columbus County, Miss Harmuth is in touch with many senior citizens of the area on a daily basis. She has replaced Susan Wood, who is continuing her education, in the RSVP post.

Prior to coming to Southeastern, Ms. Harmuth served as District Recreation Supervisor for Montgomery, Va. County Parks and Recreation Department, with her responsibilities including planning seasonal recreation, educational and cultural programs for her district.

This fits in well with her current RSVP duties which involves responsibility for planning all special events programs and all senior citizens programs for the county.

By JIGGS POWERS

Showing signs of rustiness due to lack of workouts over the Yuletide holidays, Southeastern Community College's Rams basketball team dropped their first home game of the season here, Thursday night, bowing to Fort Bragg's Post team, 81-76.

The game was played in the new Whiteville High School gym, the site of all of SCC's home-games this year. It was the first for the Rams in the new plant, since it was their intitial home-game of the 1978 schedule.

The Rams met Louisburg College's Hurricanes in an official Eastern Tar Heel Junior College Conference game, Saturday night at 7:30 o'clock. The game featured the play of two former Columbus County foes against each other. Clarence Ganus, the leading point-maker of the Rams is a former Hallsboro star and Louisburg's Ottis Nixon is a former West Columbus star and the two faced each other many times while in high school. They continued that battle here, Saturday night.

The largest crowd ever to attended a home-game of the Southeastern Community College Rams watched as the SCC club made it close all the way, but just never could quite defeat the Foirt Bragg quint, trailing at the half, 41-39 and then being outscored.

"It was the long Christmas layoff that showed up in our game with Ft. Bragg," said Coach Harry Foley of the Rams, "Most of the fellows went home to distant places or nearby and missed drills and playing. It had been 22 days since we played our last game — at Fort Bragg on Dec. 14. We had been working out for only a few days since the resumation of classes at the college following the holiday.

"I feel like, with this game under our belts," said Foley, "that the fellows will be ready to settle down and play much better basketball by (the past) Saturday night when we face Louisburg here, also next Tuesday when we go to Kinston to face the Lenoir Community College cagers in a doubleheader (the women Rams will play there, too)."

In the game here, Clarence Ganus and former Whiteville Wolfpacker Marcell Hawkins each had 16 points to pace the local collegians, while Jimmy Nealy had 14 and Noland Pearsall had 11. Hawkins also had 10 rebounds for the Rams.

For Fort Bragg, Thomas Powell sank 22 points, Ronald Holm added 14, Leroy Coleman 13, and Thomas Miller had 12. Southeastern was 2-4 after the loss.

FORT BRAGG (81) — Coleman 13, Powell 22, Holm 14, Don Guyton 4, Miller 12, Turtis Trice 8, Steve Francis 1, Rufus Minor 4, Charles Woodson 1, George Beamon 2. SOUTHEASTERN (76) — Ganus 16, Al Cromartie 6, Pearsall 1, Louis Simeon 8, George Murphy 4, Graham Inscoe 1, Nealy 14, Hawkins 16.

NIXON GETS 11

Stan Lewter hit 32 points to lead the 'Canes to the Eastern Tar Heel Conference win over Coach Harry Foley's Rams, who trailed 51-36 at the half. Bill Boyette also had 11 points and Steve Brown and Twig Little each hit 10 for the winners. Clarence Ganus hit 22 points, Louis Simeon led with 24, and Marcell Hawkins added 11 for Southeastern.

Southeastern, now 2-5 for the season, goes to Lenoir, along with the women Rams for a 5:30 p.m. Tuesday doubleheader; return to the Whiteville gym for a Thursday night game against King's of Raleigh; and then goes to Newport News, Va., Friday for the weekend NN Apprentice School Tournament.

Open Card In New Loop

By JIGGS POWERS
(News Reporter Sports Editor)

Coach Harry Foley's Southeastern Community College Rams will lose no time getting into action in the new Eastern Tar Heel Athletic Conference this winter.

The Rams will open their 1978 schedule with an ETHAC game against Chowan's Braves at Murfreesboro on Friday, Dec. 2. The battle will pry the lid off both the Rams' overall card and the 23-game season slated for the SCC outfit, also its eight-game Eastern Tar Heel slate.

Other members of the new conference, a merging of remaining members of the former Cavalier-Tar Heel Junior College Conference and the former North Carolina Community College Athletic Conference, include Lenoir Community College of Kinston; Chowan, Mt. Olive and Louisburg Junior Colleges.

Non-conference games will be played against Methodist College of Fayetteville's JVs, Fort Bragg's post team, Lafayette, also of Fayetteville; Kings of Raleigh, Fayetteville State University's JVs, the University of North Carolina - Chapel Hill's JVs and Jefferson College of Greensboro.

The schedule features 10 homes games, all to be played in Whiteville High School's new gymnasium. The Rams have five games slated in December, all on the road, so as to be sure of having the use of the new high school plant when their home-slate opens. It will begin here with Fort Bragg on January 5.

Too, the Southeastern entry will participate for the first time in the Newport News Apprentice School Basketball Tournament in Newport News, Va. on January 13-14. This will give the Rams the distinct possibility of taking part in two tourneys, since the new EHAC will automatically receive two berths in the National Junior College (JUCO) Athletic Association's Region X (Ten) Tournament to be held in Rocky Mount, Va. after the close of the overall schedule.

Coach Foley, in his second season at the helm of the Rams, said that all of the games on the schedule will begin at 7:30 p.m., with the exception of the one at Mt. Olive, which will start at 8 p.m., and the one at Chapel Hill, which will be a 5:55 p.m. preliminary to a varsity game to be played in Carmichael Auditorium, an important ACC clash with Clemson's Tigers on the same night.

SCC Coach Proud Of Team

The Brunswick Beacon 2-2-78

Southeastern Community College Basketball Coach Harry Foley has started his second season and seems confident and assured of his team's talent and ability.

He said, "They aren't as tall this year as last year, but they are quicker. Last year there were some members measuring in at 6'8 and 6'9."

While talking about the team Coach Foley said, "The players are full-time students and can be enrolled in any program at the college." Recruiting players is no problem because Southeastern has had a basketball program since it's inception, he said. "The Rams have a good reputation, which is the best means of bringing in new talent."

Another method of recruitment is "word of mouth" by the players. Foley added, "I travel some to local high schools and over the state, as well as South Carolina, looking for talent." Last year the Rams were in the Region X play-off, which included North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia Junior Colleges.

When asked if he has students from distant areas, Foley stated, "At this time the Rams count among its members two young men from St. Thomas, The Virgin Islands. An article in their local newspaper was seen by a recreational director there who helped make arrangements for the two to attend Southeastern Community College."

Upon leaving Southeastern, many of the basketball players receive scholarships. Three young men who graduated from Southeastern last year are now continuing their studies and basketball careers at four-year schools. Wallace Moore of Winchester, Ky., now attends Coppin State University in Baltimore, Md.; Merele Britt of Lumberton attends the University of South Carolina at Coastal of Conway, S.C.; and Robert Mills of Rowland attends Mercer University of Georgia.

Coach Foley is a member of the faculty at Southeastern Community College. He has also taught English and social studies in West Memphis, Ark., and at Acme-Delco High School. He said, "I never played basketball; I just kind of backed into it. In the beginning I helped out when I was a student at Southeastern by keeping score and just became more and more involved in basketball. I went from being a fan to scorekeeper to assistant to coach." Foley stressed, "I volunteered to coach."

By JIGGS POWERS

After picking up enough points on a central and northeastern road trip to make them 10-1 for the season and 5-1 in the Eastern Tarheel Junior College Conference, Coach Barry Nation's Southeastern Community College golfers are today (Monday) hosting the Chowan Braves and Spartanburg Methodist College at Pineland Country Club near Nichols, S.C.

The Rams of SCC swept matches at Wake Forest Country Club out of Raleigh, Thursday, and at Beechwood Country Club at Murfreesboro on Friday, both of them triangular meets. At Wake Forest CC, their victims were Ferrum, Va. Junior College and host Louisburg; at Murfreesboro they defeated Ferrum again and host Chowan Junior College.

THURSDAY WIN

WAKE FOREST COUNTRY CLUB — Playing here, Thursday, Southeastern's Rams toured the 7,200-yard hilly layout in 324, led by Medalist Thomas Gunn of Mullins, S.C., who fired a 75, considered very good for the 72-par Wake Forest CC course. The Rams' total was good enough to beat Ferrum, Va. JUCO's runner-up who had a 336, a stroke under host Louisburg's 337.

Other Rams scorers included Demette Bordeaux with 80, Donald Sneeden, 81, and Neil Carter 88. Jeff Chamberlin shot an 89, Joey Gore 90 for other SCC individual finishes. Ferrum's leader was Hale with an 82, followed by Torrence with 84, Robertson and Golekin with 85s and also Agee 86 and Hallis 91. Louisburg's Hurricanes had a leader in Bill Freeman with an 82; followed by Loftis with an 84; Jon Daniels 85; and Chip McIntyre with an 86; Wheeler with 86 and Kevin Guyette 87.

LOWEST TOTAL

MURFREESBORO — Friday, the Rams had their best day of the current season when they played the "twin-personality" Beechwood Country Club course just out of Murfreesboro and defeated host Chowan's Braves by 10 strokes, the SCC crew winning, 313 to 323. Ferrum came in third-place in this one, shooting 336 as a team.

Also, Thomas Gunn, the Mullins, S.C. ace of the Rams, had a fine 74 for another medal, and the Southeastern outfit had four of the 6 low scorers in the meet.

"Beechwood was absolutely a 'two-faced' course as to the makeup of its front and back nines," said Coach Nation in telling how his linksmen came up with their best round of the year on one of the toughest courses he's seen. "At Beechwood, the first nine holes are short and light, not too much difficulty. But, when you get into the back-nine, you feel like you've been ambushed. This part of the layout is long and hilly; very difficult. Still the Rams turned in excellent play. Agains, we were very proud of all of them, down through our sixth man, but particularly of Tom Gunn. who had an excellent 35-37 (note that 37 on that tough back nine!) for his medal score."

After Gunn came Donald Sneeden with a fine 77; Neil Carter with an 80; Demette Bordeaux 82; also Joey Gore with 85 and Jeff Chamberlin with 90. Chowan's runners-up club had Sears with a 75, just behind Medalist Gunn; Burleson and Sisson with 83s and Ailsworth with 84; also Everhart with 91 and Martin 93.

Ferrum was paced by Robertson with an 81, followed by Agee 82, Torrence 85 and Hale 88; also Shant 90, Phillips 94.

Coach Nation feels that if his club keeps up its peak playing as has been the case in its last three outings, it will stand a very good chance of making the Region X (10) JUCO Tournament at Bay Tree Golf Plantation at North Myrtle Beach, S.C. on May 22-24. A first or second-place finish in either regular season or ETJCC Tourney — the latter to be held at Old Point Country Club between Wilmington and Hampstead on April 30 - May 1-2 — will put the Southeastern team in the Region X event.

Two Big Additions To SCC Cage Program

News Reporter 5-6-1978

By DAN BISER

Southeastern Community College Coach Harry Foley has just signed two cagers who should almost certainly have a strong impct on his basketball program during the 1978-79 season and he didn't have to go far to get them.

George McKoy of Clarkton and Andrew Mayes of Tar Heel were two of the top senior players in Bladen County in 1978 and both signed on with the Runnin' Rams last week.

McKoy, a 5-10 guard, and Mayes, a 6-3 forward, both averaged in the 26 points per game in 1978. Both are three year starters for their respective schools with McKoy being chosen All-East in the 1-A classification for the past season.

McKoy paced Clarkton to runner-up in the state finals in both 1977 and 1978. His younger brother, Leonard, a 6-2 post man, has one more year with the Blue Devils.

"We're very pleased to get these two," Foley said. "George should really help our basketball program. He can play either point guard or shooting guard. He can control the tempo of the game, shoot well from the outside, penetrate a defense, find the open man and play good defense.

"Andrew's hustling style of play will be a definite asset to the Rams' basketball program," Foley added.

Foley said that both players, particularly McKoy, were heavily recruited.

The Rams are a member of the Eastern Tar Heel Junior College Athletic Conference. Other conference affiliates are Louisburg, Chowan, Lenoir County and Mt. Olive.

Rams Defeat Ferrum In Fast JUCO Doubleheader

News Reporter 4-10-78

By JIGGS POWERS

RAMS FIELD—Just back from a diastrous road-trip, Coach Bob Young's Southeastern Community College Rams reached back like a good pitcher, summoned that little bit extra and came up with a surprising doubleheader victory over a good Ferrum, Va. College team here, Friday afternoon by margins of 2-1 and 6-4.

The victories for Coach Young's outfit made it 6-4 in the Eastern Tarheel Junior College Conference and 11-9 overall for the season. Ferrum's stock in the conference dropped to 4-4.

ANDY ACTIVE

Andy Robinson, who had went the route in a 7-inning game the day before in Spartanburg, S.C. only to lose, 3-1, took over for Starter Beaver Oxendine in the third inning here, Friday and became the winner when his mates tallied twice in the 5th to take an edge Robinson and Friends held the remainder of the tilt. Ferrum had but 5 hits, while SCC was getting 8 off Mack Stockton, who went the route for the visitors.

TOP HITTERS

Seth Smith was 2 for 2; Ronnie Faison hit 2 for 3, Mike Hobbs had 2 for 3 with a double to pace the Rams. However, Hobbs' single was the most important single of the day as it came with Ferrum leading, 1-0. In the bottom of the 5th, Designated Hitter Bobby Hoffman singled, Faison followed with a single up the middle and West sacrificed both down, then Hobbs cracked a single to right - center to score the tying and winning runs, as it were.

RESCUER ANDY

In the nightcap, Jerry Baldwin was accredited with the mound win, but again it was the hard-working Robinson who came in in the 6th inning to get the save. Three Ferrum errors — the only ones of the second game — followed by Hobbs and Allen Barefoot singles, a Seth Smith sacrifice, a fielder's choice by Rozier, Jerry Bullard's life on an error at short, a hit-batsman (Hoffman), an error in right on Beaver Oxendine's fly there and a Faison single scored the 5 runs for SCC in the 4th inning, the margin they needed to sweep the twin-bill.

BAREFOOT HITS

Allen Barefoot hit 2 for 3, one a double for the winners; 3rd-Baseman Jimmy Stinnett hit 2 for 3, one a solo homer in the 6th and Designated - Hitter Keith Noell hit 2 for 3, also for Ferrum.

MONROE — Thomas Gunn, the Mullins, S.C. member of the Southeastern Community College Rams golf crew, toured the handsome, wide open Monroe Country Club course in a one-over-par 73 here, Friday to pace Coach Barry Nation's team from Whiteville to a win over both Wingate and Brevard Junior Colleges' linksmen.

The Rams had a low total of 321 to Wingate's 332 and Brevard's 354. The decision made Nation's Rams 5-1 on the season. They are at home today (Monday) to the Louisburg Hurricanes at Pineland Country Club near Nichols, S.C., the site of all Rams' home-meets.

Gunn turned in his best match round since joining the Rams on scholarship, leading his nearest competitor by 5 strokes. Wingate's Eric Gross fired a 78 for runner-up spot, while Demette Bordeaux of Southeastern and Neil Carter, also a Rams member, had 82s.

"I was very happy with Gunn's 73," said Coach Nation, "and, as fine as the day was, I was a little surprised we didn't have more men in the 70s; the day and the way the fellows were hitting the ball tended to make one believe the scores would be better. But, they did show much improvement with the appearance of good weather. We're looking forward to meeting Louisburg today (Monday)."

Brevard's top four men were Furgeson with 83, Fairman 89, Hamrick 89, and Nifong 93. Nation's club recently received its second forfeit from Lenoir Community College when their playing date came up last week. Lenoir's club folded after the schedule had been started.

MEET THE RAMS!

Columbus County News 11-29-78

George Murphy, the 6'5", 172-pound returning forward for the 1978-1978 "Running Rams" of Southeastern Community College, will play a major role for Coach Harry Foley's cagers this year.

Starting along with 6'2" forward Charles Webb, guards George McKoy, 5'10", and 6'2" Mike Southerland, and 6'6" center Noland Pearsall, Murphy will be expected to carry a great deal of the offense with his deadly outside shooting and excellent ball handling ability. "He's very accurate up to 18 feet out," explains Coach Foley. Noting that Murphy's favorite spot is on the baseline, Foley adds, "He's amazing when he gets on the baseline; he's almost impossible to stop there."

Coming from Union High School Spartans of the East Waccamaw 2-A Conference, Murphy was the number two scorer for the Rams last year with 18 points per game. He shot 54 percent from the field and 67 percent from the foul line during his freshman year and was the number three rebounder for the 1977-78 Rams with 8 rebounds per game. He also averaged 3 assists per game.

Now, as a sophomore at SCC, George is expected to increase his shooting percentages and take over the team leadership role. "He has shown good leadership quality during practice and in scrimmage games," Coach Foley notes of the soft-spoken, well-mannered forward. "The team, Coach Herschel Walsh and I will depend on him for leadership this year."

And George has taken up the spirit of team leadership. "We've got some great ball players this year and we're capable of going undefeated," asserted Murphy. "But we've got to play together; if we play together, we'll have a great season."

On November 30th, George will lead his team against the Duke J.V.'s in Durham. This test should indicate what strength and ball-playing abilities the SCC cagers have. Even if the game is close, win or lose, the "Running Rams" will have proved themselves as a formidable basketball team.

Lady Rams Expected To Be Better This Winter

News Reporter

By JIGGS POWERS

Despite the fact they've lost their first game of the 1979 schedule, the Southeastern Community College Lady Rams are much more representative than the first women's basketball team at the local college last winter.

That's the concensus of Lady Rams Coach Susan Harmuth, who has released an 11-person roster who will wear the regalia of the Rams in femme action on the hardwood during the 1979 season.

"Last year," says Coach Harmuth who comes here from Radford College College in Virginia for her second year as women's cage mentor, "we actually had to rush into things because it was decided a bit late that we would have a women's team at Southeastern. We had to get players in a rush and, though all gave their best, we had some rough moments. This year, we feel that we have had a better time to pick our candidates and also look over those who came out and get a much more representative team."

She has five of the Lady Rams back from the 1978 team that finished with a 2-7 record. They are Linda Rogers from Orrum High School, a 5-8 sophomore; Dale Nealy, a 5-5 soph who is a four-time All-Columbus High Schooler from Williams Township (she and Rogers led the team last year); Frances Small, 5-9 soph of Whiteville; Jennifer McLean, 5-1 soph from Fairmont; and Alfreda Suggs, 5-8 soph of West Columbus.

Also on the current club are Denise Dickson, from Acme-Delco and a softball player at East Carolina last spring, a 5-6 soph; Kathy Starnes, who was an All-Columbus at Whiteville High last winter, a 5-6 freshman; also Freshmen Debra Smith, former All-Columbus at Acme-Delco, 5-5; Gloria Shipman, 5-7 from Whiteville High; Laverne Josephs, 5-8 and Marilyn Creque, 5-7, both freshmen from St. Thomas, Virgin Islands.

"The girls have played very well, so far," says Coach Harmuth, "despite the fact we had a disadvtange in height against Mt. Olive, we rallied and played a good second half. We had dropped behind early in the game because of fouls and questionable calls, but after the halftime halt the girls played inspired ball and we cut the MO lead to 6 points one time, but we couldn't quite keep the pace."

The Lady Rams open their home schedule at Whiteville High School gym Thursday at 6 p.m. against the touring Truett - McConnell Junior College team year. They'll also play Chowan, Peace, Mt. Olive and Pfeiffer among others on their northern swing in a 28-game schedule this year.

The game will be followed by the home-open for the male Rams of Coaches Harry Foley and Herschel Walsh against N.C. Central's JVs from Durham at 8 p.m. The male Rams then travel to Richmond, Va., Saturday, for a 5:45 p.m. game there with Smithdale-Massey College.

JANUARY 8 — at Ft. Bragg (6); 17 — Mt. Olive, here (6); 20 — Chowan at Murfreesboro (6); 29 — at Louisburg Junior College (6); 31 — Louisburg, here (7:30).

FEBRUARY 1 — Fayetteville State University, here (6); 7 — Ft. Bragg, here (6); 10 — Chowan, here (6); 12 — North Greenville, S.C. College, here (6); 13 — Peace Junior College in Raleigh (7); 16 — Coastal Carolina (UNC-Conway), here (6); 19 — at North Greenville, S.C. College (6).

By JIGGS POWERS

A 16-game schedule will face the Lady Rams, Southeastern Community College's femme basketball team, in its second year of competition — 1979.

Coach Susan Harmuth today announced her Lady Warriors' upcoming card, which will include a number of newcoming foes, as well as some that the SCC women met in its initial schedule, 1978.

Coach Harmuth, who led the Lady Warriors in their first season, expects just four veterans back from the initial team in femme sports here. She has indicated, however, that she expects a more competitive club to represent Southeastern in women's basketball than was last year's outfit.

The Lady Rams were due to play an 18-game schedule this season, but Coach Harmuth under

Mount Olive Junior College, Fayetteville State University, Fort Bragg, all were foes on the 9-game schedule Coach Harmuth's beginning crew played last year; a season that saw the Lady Rams win two of the nine contests.

Newcomers to the 1979 slate include Truett - McConnel, Coastal Carolina (University of South Carolina at Conway); Chowan Junior College, Louisburg Junior College, North Greenville Junior College of Greenville, S.C. and Peace Junior College of Raleigh. Most of the clubs will be met on a home-and-home basis, except Truett-McConnel.

The Lady Rams season will begin on December 2 with Mount Olive women at Mount Olive, in a preliminary to the Rams-MO Eastern Tar Heel Junior College Conference game. The two Rams teams play at Fayetteville Community College Lady Rams basketball slate, with games listed as preliminaries to Rams men's games marked+:

DECEMBER +2 — at Mount Olive (6 p.m.); +5 — at Fayetteville State University (6); +7 — Truett-McConnel, here (6); 13 — at Coastal Carolina, Conway, S.C. (7); 16 — open.

JANUARY +8 — at Fort Bragg (6); +17 — Mount Olive, here (6); +20 — at Chowan (6); 27 — open; 29 — at Louisburg (6); +31 — Louisburg, here (6).

George McKoy Gets First Dale Gore Sports Grant-Aid To SCC

By ERIC McLAMB

The Rams basketball team at Southeastern Community College received a great boost when George McKoy, the highly talented guard from Clarkton's Blue Devils state 1-A finalists the past three years, was signed for the 1978-1979 season.

The heavily recruited basketball sensation from Clarkton High School was given an athletic scholarship paying tuition and book costs for the school year. The scholarship, sponsored by Dale Gore of Dale's Seafood Restaurant in Whiteville, is a new scholarship fund that provides financial assistance each year to a promising and deserving athlete. Gore is a sports enthusiast and a long time follower of Columbus County sports. This is the first athletic scholarship presented to a basketball player under head basketball coach Harry Foley.

Both Coach Foley and Gore agree that George is an excellent choice as the recipient of the scholarship award. "I feel very fortunate to have a player of George's calibre playing for us. He comes from a winning tradition," expressed Coach Foley. "He'll give us the ball handling ability that we did not have last year. In my opinion, he could play major college ball right now."

George's high school basketball record speaks for itself. The 5'10", 160 pound freshman was voted All-East Cape Fear 1-A Conference in his sophomore, junior and senior years. Honorable Mention All-East in his junior year, and Raleigh News and Observers All-East in his senior year. He was voted the team's Most Valuable Player and led the team in scoring with 26.6 points per game and in assists with 4.4 per game.

George McKoy promises to be a team leader this year. Even though the first game is scheduled to be played near the end of November, Coach Foley is very optimistic about having a great season. With George leading the team, chances appear to be excellent of Southeastern having another winning basketball year.

MEET THE RAMS!

News Reporter 11-30-78

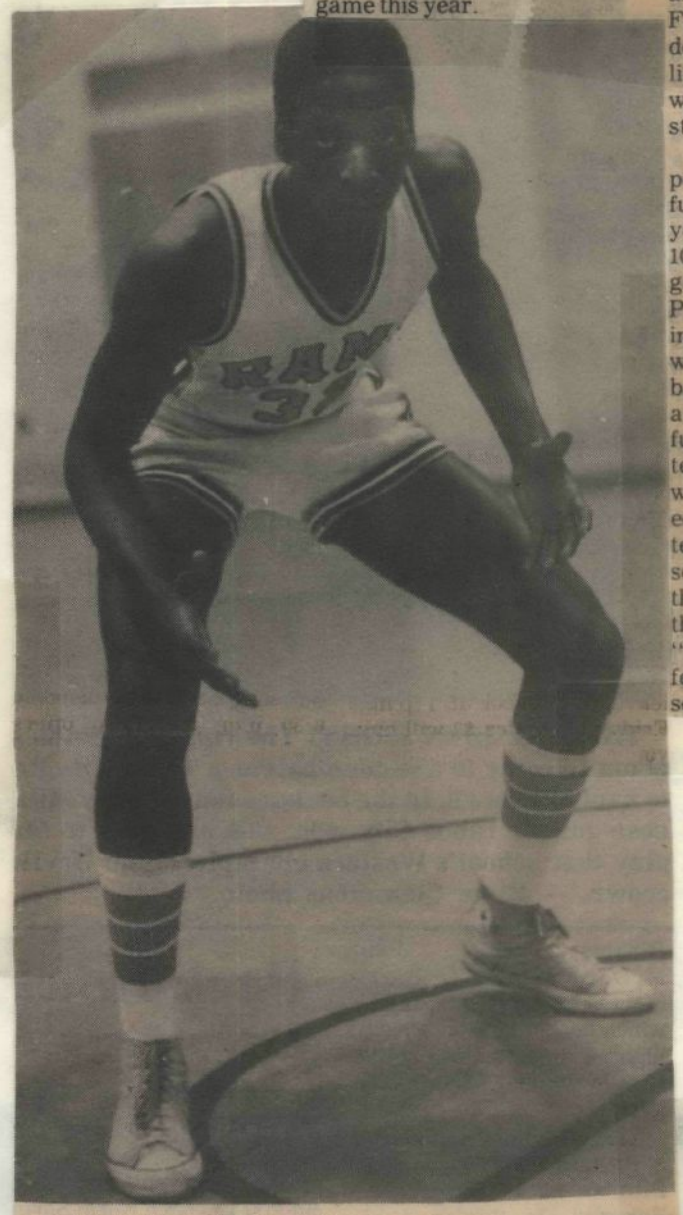
Noland Persall, the 6'5", 185-pound veteran center for the 1978-1979 "Running Rams" of Southeastern Community College, is expected to spearhead a strong defense for the Rams this year, according to coach Harry Foley.

The muscular sophomore had a strong inside game last year, and practices indicate that he will have a much stronger one this year. He averaged three blocked shots per game last season and led the team in rebounding with nine per game. Foley said that Pearsall should average around fourteen rebounds per game this year.

Pearsall had a very impressive season last year especially considering he did not play organized high school basketball. "He has some fundamental weaknesses," admits Foley. "His offense is not as quick as I'd like to see it, but he has been vastly improving his speed. and agility in practices."

Pearsall's inside game should also boost the team's offensive threat. He averaged 12 points per game last season and is expected to average between 16 and 18 points per game this year. "He's a good shooter from around the basket," states Foley. "He has a strong desire to play ball, and he likes to win. I'm confident he will provide a lot of offensive strength for us."

Suffering from a recent hip-pointer, Pearsall feels he is at full strength. "Even when you're hurt, you've got to give 100 percent effort if you're going to be a good player," Pearsall said in a recent interview. Pearsall feels that what makes a good basketball player is a good, healthy attitude toward playing. He further added that the whole team has developed a good, winning attitude; he is equally impressed with the team's ability to win. "I've seen in practice that we have the talent to go all the way this year," asserts Pearsall. "With the team's attitude, I feel we'll have a winning season."



NOLAND PEARSALL is expected to spearhead the defense this year for the SCC "Running Rams" with his strong inside game. He will be the starting center for the Rams.

MEET THE RAMS ... Southeastern CC's 1979 Cagers!

MEET THE RAMS!

(Ed's Note: "Meet The Rams" is to be an offering of Eric McLamb, Southeastern Community College's information officer for the 1979 Rams basketball season. Today's opener deals with the upcoming Rams' cage team and its prospects for the season. Later insertions will tell of the individuals of the organization. — JP).

The National Junior College Athletic Association, Eastern Tarheel Conference "running" Rams from Southeastern Community College have developed a killer instict which basketball coach Harry Foley hopes will lead his cagers to the regional championship in Rocky Mount, Virginia. The team led by coaches Foley and Herschel Walsh, is strong enough, fast enough and determined enough to do just that.

Coming off of last year's 13-13 overall record (3-5 in the conference), the outlook for the 1978-1979 season is "very promising," according to Foley. "We have a good nucleus of returning players," Foley adds as he looks at his well-balanced roster. "Last year's conference losses were by small margins, including a 3 point loss in double overtime to number one Chowan. This year we plan to be on the winning end," asserts Foley. "However, the players realize that if they don't work hard at it they could very well end up in the cellar."

Foley and Walsh had a successful recruiting year in that a lot of strength and depth lies with the first year players. A major improvement in the squad is in its ball handling ability. Leading the list is 5'10", 150-pound, standout guard George McKoy from last year's state 1-A finalists Clarkton Blue Devils. McKoy is this year's recipient of the First Dale's Seafood Scholarship Award which is to be annually presented to a deserving and promising athlete at SCC.

The forward position is made up of recruits Charles Webb, 6'2", 170-pounds from Delco, 6'2", 190-pound Jeff Morrisey from Turkey, 6'1", 170-pound Audie Malone from the Virginia Islands, and 6'3", 180-pound Andrew Mays from Tar Heel, in addition to Hawkins, Cid and Webb.

The depth at the center position comes from 6'6", 190-pound recruit Joe Rado Frazer from the Virgin Islands as well as Noland Pearsall. Foley states that most of the forwards are prepared to play the center position and vice-versa as necessary. "By doing this, we are adding a lot more strength and depth at the forward and center positions," adds Foley.

Coach Foley indicated that the starters would probably be McKoy and Southerland at guards, Webb and Murphy at forwards and Pearsall at center. But there is a lot of depth backing up those five and the team spirit is high.

The Rams will start their season on November 30 against the Duke J.V.'s in Durham. The first home game will be against the North Carolina Central J.V.'s on December 7 in the Whiteville High School gymnasium. Season tickets will be available for $15.00 from any member of the coaching staff, SCC Athletic Committee or the cheerleaders after November 20th. The tickets will admit the entire family for men's and women's basketball games. For further information, call 642-7141, Extension 30 or 59.

SCC Falls In Opener

3rd Dec. 6, 1978

DURHAM — The Southeastern Community College Ram basketball team saw its 10-point halftime lead go down the drain as an effective half court press by the Duke junior varsity gave the Baby Blue Devils a 96-84 win in the opening contests for both squads this season.

"Things just fell apart the second half," said SCC cage coach Harry Foley whose forces held a 47-37 lead at the half-way mark. "The first half we were playing just as we had hoped to. We were mixing our offenses and hustling on defense. Then in the second half, they put that press on at mid-court and our inexperience at the guard spots began showing. There were a lot of turnovers and they go some easy baskets off steals."

The rams George Murphy, a 6-5 sophomore from Union, led all scorers with 30 points. He had seven rebounds. Mike Southerland was the only other Ram to hit in double figures as he had 19.

By JIGGS POWERS

A 16-game schedule will face the Lady Rams, Southeastern Community College's femme basketball team, in its second year of competition — 1979.

Coach Susan Harmuth today announced her Lady Warriors' upcoming card, which will include a number of newcoming foes, as well as some that the SCC women met in its initial schedule, 1978.

Coach Harmuth, who led the Lady Warriors in their first season, expects just four veterans back from the initial team in femme sports here. She has indicated, however, that she expects a more competitive club to represent Southeastern in women's basketball than was last year's outfit.

The Lady Rams were due to play an 18-game schedule this season, but Coach Harmuth announced Monday that two games — home-and-home — that had been booked with Lenoir Community College of Kinston had been cancelled. Lenoir authorities have informed Southeastern's staff that the Kinston-based college had decided not to sponsor a women's cage club during 1979.

Mount Olive Junior College, Fayetteville State University, Fort Bragg, all were foes on the 9-game schedule Coach Harmuth's beginning crew played last year; a season that saw the Lady Rams win two of the nine contests.

Newcomers to the 1979 slate include Truett - McConnel, Coastal Carolina (University of South Carolina at Conway); Chowan Junior College, Louisburg Junior College, North Greenville Junior College of Greenville, S.C. and Peace Junior College of Raleigh. Most of the clubs will be met on a home-and-home basis, except Truett-McConnel.

The Lady Rams season will begin on December 2 with Mount Olive women at Mount Olive, in a preliminary to the Rams-MO Eastern Tar Heel Junior College Conference game. The two Rams teams play at Fayetteville State University in a December 5 doubleheader.

Southeastern's women, who will also use the Whiteville High School gym for its home games again this year, will play their first home game of 1979 here against the touring Truett-McConnel team on December 7 at 6 p.m.

The 1979 Southeastern Community College Lady Rams basketball slate, with games listed as preliminaries to Rams men's games marked+:

DECEMBER +2 — at Mount Olive (6 p.m.); +5 — at Fayetteville State University (6); +7 — Truett-McConnel, here (6); 13 — at Coastal Carolina, Conway, S.C. (7); 16 — open.

JANUARY +8 — at Fort Bragg (6); +17 — Mount Olive, here (6); +20 — at Chowan (6); 27 — open; 29 — at Louisburg (6); +31 — Louisburg, here (6).

Pembroke Signs Ganus, Former Tig, Rams Star

News Reporter 7-10-78

By GENE WARREN

PEMBROKE — Clarence Ganus, a 6-foot-1 guard from Hallsboro who has started for the last two years for Southeastern Community College Rams' at Whiteville, has accepted a basketball scholarship to Pembroke State University.

During the past season he averaged 21 points per game and hit on 52 per cent of his shots from the field. He won all-conference honors as a Rams' freshman star in the North Carolina Community College Conference and repeated as an All-Eastern Tarheel Junior College star the past season; leading the ETJCC in scoring over much of the route.

Ganus graduated in '76 from Hallsboro High School where he was coached by Linwood Hedgpeth, who has had phenomenal coaching success. Coaching Ganus at Southeastern Community College has been Harry Foley.

Ganus won spots on The Whiteville News Reporter's All-Columbus Team and the Coaches' All-East Waccamaw 2-A Conference Team while at Hallsboro High.

New PSU head basketball coach Billy Lee says of Ganus: "He can score — and we've got to have people who can shoot with the depature of people like Lenwood Graham (20.8 scoring average). Ganus can help us right away — and I think fans will enjoy watching him. Even at 6-1, he can stuff it."

This is the third basketball signee announced by PSU, others being 6-8 Chris Oswald, a freshman from West Carteret High School, and 6-4 George Drawhorne, a transfer from Chowan Junior College.

Upward Bound Olympics Set At Pembroke State

PEMBROKE — Pembroke State University will be host for the first time to N.C.'s "Upward Bound" Summer Olympics in which 650 young people will participate Friday and Saturday.

Twelve schools, including Pembroke State's defending champions, will take part. Others are Fayetteville State, UNC-Chapel Hill, Western Carolina, North Carolina A&T, Elizabeth City State, Shaw, Livingstone, J. C. Smith, Chowan, Durham College, and Southeastern Community College.

Sports participation will be in softball, volleyball, swimming, tennis, basketball, and track and field. Competition begins at 1 p.m. July 21. Orientation will be at 11 a.m. that day in the PSU Performing Arts Center.

Gold, silver and bronze medals will be awarded to first, second and third place individual winners. There will be three team trophies to the top three teams in overall competition.

"We have 216 total individual medals," said Alphonzo McRae, counselor for special programs at PSU, who is director of the meet. McRae is a former NAIA honorable mention All-American in basketball at PSU.

Past "Upward Bound" Summer Olympics have been held at Chapel Hill and Greensboro.

"We asked that it be held here," said McRae, "and feel we will do a good job with it because our athletic facilities are so close together."

McRae also thinks PSU has a good chance of repeating as meet champions. "However, it will be tougher. Last year we woke up everyone. The other schools will be shooting for us this year," he said.

The PSU team warmed up for the meet by playing Southeastern Community College recently in practice competition. The Braves won the both men's and women's basketball and volleyball, but lost in softball.

McRae thinks having the meet here will be a big asset to university recruiting. "There will be a lot of young people here. I want them to see our beautiful campus and our wonderful facilities. They will then know what we have to offer. They'll see what Pembroke State University is all about," he concluded.

The "Upward Bound" participants will be housed in PSU dormitories and have their meals in the PSU cafeteria. On Friday night they will also attend "Strike At The Wind," the popular outdoor drama in its third season near Pembroke.

Alan Barefoot Attempts To Warn 74-76 Truckers

On Wednesday, March 22, 20-year-old Alan Barefoot decided that he had had enough.

Late that afternoon, a tractor-trailer truck had overturned on the curve that runs by his family's home. The truck and its fuel oil contents were heavily damaged and the driver was seriously injured.

Barefoot may not have been so obsessed with his disgust if it hadn't been for the fact that 14 other large trucks had overturned at the same spot during the past four years.

Barefoot's Curve (named for the home of the late Willie Barefoot, Alan's father, located on the south side of the curve) has become a notorious land mark in Columbus County. It is located between Whiteville and Hallsboro on the heavily traveled U.S. 74-76 and has taken a tremendous toll of serious truck and auto accidents.

Barefoot felt that he had seen too many trucks lying on their sides with oil spilling on the highway and adjacent fields and ditches. He felt he had seen too many deaths and too many "lucky to be alive" survivors on the curve. He was frustrated at seeing the frequent long lines of delayed traffic in front of his home and he was tired of watching state patrolmen measure skid marks. He was fed up and felt that he had to do something.

Last week Barefoot put the finishing touches on a large sign that reads: "Danger Truckers. 18-Wheeler Graveyard!" Thursday morning he placed the large wooden sign several hundred yards east of the curve (the westbound lane is where the majority of accidents have originated.)

"I don't know what the state is going to think about this sign," Barefoot said as he used a hoe to fill in dirt around the large sign poles. "They will probably have it taken down. But even if I can keep it up for just a short time, I will feel that I am doing something about it."

Having lived on the curve all his life, Barefoot has a lot of sentimental value in it, "but lately all you hear about it are bad things. People have written the paper and say they want the curve wiped off the map. That would be just about like wiping part of my home off the map."

Barefoot admits that he dislikes the danger the curve holds, but pointed out that in most cases, speed laws have been violated.

"The curve speed limit is clearly marked at 15 miles per hour," he said. "If truckers slowed to that speed, most of these accidents would have never happened."

Barefoot added that in just about all cases the trucks have been carrying heavy loads and that these loads shift greatly when the trucks enter the curve at high speeds.

"And the next thing you know the truck is all over the road," he said.

"After that last accident, I got to counting how many wrecks I remembered happening here," he said. "I counted 15 truck accidents without counting all the car wrecks. All of these had happened in the past four years. They haven't always occured this often. Not that I remember anyway."

Barefoot, who is a sophomore at Southeastern Community College where he is starting first baseman for the Ram baseball team, said that he has for a long time been hearing people say that something needs to be done about the curve.

"Well, I'm doing it," he said. "I guess I should have done this before now. Hopefully the truckers and other drivers will slow down and read it and it will give them something to think about as they go into the curve."

By 3 p.m. Thursday afternoon, Barefoot's sign was down and gone. It had been up less than five hours.

"I have no idea who took it down and hauled it away," he said. "My next door neighbor had been by earlier and the sign had been taken up and was lying on the ground. He put it back up for me. But then a few hours later it was gone completely. That made me mad.

"I can go along with the fact that the sign might have been violating state highway ordinances, but I thought they would have at least tried to get up with me about it and let me take it down," he said.

B.A. Mills of the district office of the North Carolina Department of Transportation reported this morning that he had not been informed of the sign and that he wasn't sure that it had been removed by DOT personnel.

"Such a sign is in violation of state highway laws," he said. "Unless the sign is an official state-owned sign, it must be removed."

Mills said that "it is good public relations" for DOT to inform the sign's owner and have him remove it, but that it is not required procedure.

blacks in North Carolina have equal rights with whites?

Brenda Kelly, SCC student: "I feel black people aren't treated equal because that little streak of prejudice is still sweeping the air. Some places you go they don't want you to enter by the front door. I feel we should do something about it."

Lonnie Moore, SCC student: "I feel like all blacks are virtually speechless when it comes to equal rights. They have been pushed back and aside for so long that most feel like they will never overcome. There are a few strugglers that are stubborn enough not to give up and these are the brothers and sisters that will make this a black man's nation if God lets this old world stand long enough."

Denien Singletary, SCC student: "Black rights in North Carolina have improved some, but not very much."

Attending Southeastern Community College classes and living in Brunswick County has present no problems for Palmer Rudolph Royal.

He has received almost all his two year college educatoin without leaving Brunswick County. By taking advantage of SCC offerings in the Brunswick high schools, he will graduate in the spring with the Associate in Arts Degree.

Ambition and desire to achieve are clearly important factors in Royal's life. He enlisted in the Air Force in 1952 and retired in 1973. He attended East Carolina University in 1970-71.

In March of 1973, he enrolled in the Veteran Farmer Program at Southeastern and received the Associate in Applied Science Degree. In 1975 he began attending college credit classes offered in the Brunswick County high schools and will graduate with an Associate in Arts Degree.

Royal enjoys a variety of activities, such as hunting, fishing and ceramics. He is also a part-time farmer. At this time he is undecided about future college plans.

He has been a lifetime resident of Brunswick County. His parents are Lloyd and Linnie Royal. He lives in Brunswick with his wife, Mary Catherine, who also graduated from Southeastern Community College.

SCC Students Arrive In Bluff By Canoe

Columbus County News 4-19-78

Sunday morning, April 9, at 9 o'clock, six canoes docked behind Scotts Inc., where a group of students from Southeastern Community College disembarked after a trip from Boardman to Fair Bluff. The distance by car from Boardman to Fair Bluff is about 13 miles, but down the winding river is about 50 miles. They left Boardman Friday at 1:00 p.m. and arrived at Fair Bluff Sunday morning. There is no boat ramp where they landed but it is a perfect place for one. Now it is an uneven washed out debris filled spot, but it is hoped it will be made available in the future.

Twelve student members of the course in environmental Preception Studies, composed of two groups, Outdoor Recreation and Forest Management Technology, accompanied by William R. Ball, instructor composed the group.

They were Clayton Miller, Suzanne Fowler, Berma Booth, Richie Jackson, Jennifer Jones, Ricky Gore, Jean Evans, Dave Limos, Robert Barefoot Jr., Renee Babson, Rick Smith and Alex Powell, of Fair Bluff, and were a tired, bedraggled, though happy, group with varying degrees of sunburn ranging from beet red to dark tan.

A bus and truck were brought from the Boardman "port of embarkation" ready for the home trip. Everyone assisted in collecting and loading the camping gear and canoes, and as soon as the smaller items were loaded, most of the girls, who appeared to have about had it, decided the bus was a good place to retire to.

It was agreed that the trip had been fun, and well worth the effort, and that Fair Bluff is a pretty town.

On the way down the river, they found the scenery perfectly beautiful, wide, then narrow, but always around a bend, something new. They made camp at the head of Red Belly Slough on Saturday night. (the Campsite for Friday night was not available) where they pitched tents, prepared a good meal, enjoyed the campfire and rest. They had hamburger casserole, chicken bog with sausage, bacon and eggs, and all the picnic edibles to enjoy. Being in the open all day made for healthy appetites. Mr. Ball made the remark that about all they did was "eat."

At one point during the trip, they tied two of three canoes together to float down the river, while the occupants had their first swim of the season, or did some sun bathing on rafts. There were only two mishaps, when two of the canoes turned over, spilling all aboard into the water. Robert Barefoot and Rick Smith proved to be the heroes of the day, by rescuing the "spil'ees" from the water.

Mayor McNeil happened by, saw the activity along the bank and stopped to investigate. He greeted the visitors, welcoming them to our "Fair City" and got some pictures. Fair Bluff always enjoys having visitors and hopes for a return visit. (McNeill)

Wilmington Morning Star

By Susan Reeves
Staff Writer

WHITEVILLE — He's studying engineering at Southeastern Community College. His wife takes care of their two-year old son, cooks with herbs from the family garden and keeps the mobile home neat. The family exudes hospitality, but it's not southern.

Mohamad Shamsolshargh and his wife, Zohre, are Iranian. They speak Persian and have been living in Whiteville for six months.

When 23-year-old Zohre is introduced to a reporter by a friendly neighbor she gives a warm handshake and a kiss on the cheek as though you've known each other for years.

"Please, come in," she says, obviously delighted to have visitors. If it bothers her that you came unannounced, she doesn't let on.

"Sit, please," she says, indicating a chair in the sparsely-furnished room. She rushes around, trying to brush the black curls of little Abolfazl, who is making airplane noises.

She doesn't understand the visitor is interested in writing a newspaper story, but dishes up a bowl of hot soup, very fragrant, full of thin, green noodles and special herbs. Later she will take us out to the herb garden.

"Here," she says, holding up a jar of dried greens. "These from Iran." However, we learn an unusual-looking bean is available at local grocery stores.

We must leave. But another visit, with her husband, will follow the next day.

"Please, thank you," she says, shaking hands vigorously and giving a kiss goodbye. "Come again."

The next day and Zohre and Abolfazl rush to the door and introduce Mohamad, who is studying a physics book in the late afternoon sun.

"So many people want to go to university in my country, that if you are older you can only go in special programs," Mohamad, 30, explained in slow, clear English.

"You cannot get in the university to study things like engineering and medicine if you are older than, say, 20," he explained.

When he finishes his course of study at SCC in 11 months he hopes to go back to Iran.

"My country needs me. They have many jobs, but no people to do them," he said.

As he talks, Zohre places a huge platter of watermelon and glasses of hot coffee on the table.

"Eat, please eat," they urge, as Mohamad continues talking.

They are Muslims, believing in one God, Allah, and his prophet, Muhammad.

Since the family cannot worship in a mosque in Whiteville, they pray at home.

"We must pray three times a day, always facing north," he explained.

The Muslim religion governs many of their habits. They drink no alcohol. "They teach us that these things (liquor) take your heart and brain," Mohamad says. They cannot eat pork, "because it says that pork makes you weak."

The Shamsolsharghs say they don't know many people in Whiteville. They admit that people stare at Zohre, who must always wear a long black cloak when she is on the street.

The cloak, called a chador in Persian, must also be worn inside in front of all men, except her husband, father, brother, cousin or uncle. "Women and girls must cover their bodies, but they can show face and hands," Mohamad explained.

The Shamsolsharghs will move next week to a new home in Chadbourn and they want to make sure the newspaper lady comes to visit.

"I would like to explain more about my religion and what these rules mean," Mohammad says. As we talk, Zohre listens intently, jumping up often to bring in books to help her husband illustrate his points.

When asked if Zohre gets lonely, they talk in Persian, then Mohamad says, "she keeps busy with her house and, when she is finished, she studies." Zohre brings out a worn and well-marked Persian-English grammar book.

School will be over in a few days and Mohamad says the family hopes to go back to Iran for the summer. "I think we probably can't go," he says, looking thoughtful for a minute.

Handshakes and big smiles again, and saying "come back, it's very nice," and the family looking happy, not really lonely, in the fading afternoon sun.

Peterson Couple Finish Adult Education Class

Tabor City Tribune
4-26-78

On May 28, 1978, a determined dream will become a reality for Donald and Patty Peterson of Whiteville. The two will be graduating at Southeastern Community College. Mr. & Mrs. Peterson will be among approximately 110 candidates to proudly receive recognition of obtaining their high school diplomas.

After 25 years in the military traveling and raising a family of eight children, Mr. and Mrs. Peterson decided it was time to complete their high school education. They then enrolled in the Adult High School Diploma Program in the Programmed Instruction Center at Southeastern. The Petersons then eagerly began a race to see which one could complete the program first.

Mr. Peterson, who had completed the eleventh grade in public schools, was able to complete his requirements in five months. By doing so, he immediately was accepted in the business department at Southeastern. He contributed his promptness in completing high school to the quality of study he obtained in the program and his army experience of traveling throughout Europe and the United States.

While Mrs. Peterson was still working diligently to follow beind her husband, she was able to persuade on of their daughter, Donna, to take the GED test. Donna was able to successfully complete the GED in late October. As a result, she will be listed along with her parents in the 1978 high school graduation candidates listings. Donna intends to enroll in Southeastern at a later date, preferably majoring in business administration.

Finally during the first week in March, Mrs. Paterson signed her graduation form -- just in time for her to enroll in a pottery class in the colleges sping quarter. Mrs. Peterson completed her education in approximately one year. When asked what she thought of Southeastern's adult education program, she replied, "Tie is an oportuity people are follish not to take. Freedom of education is in this room (Programmed Instricton Center): People of all ages can work at their own pace and level to obtain their long-awaitrf goal -- a high school diploma, just as we did!"

The Patersons are not the "First " family to complete their school education together at Southeastern Community College. We feel they will not be the last to do so. They are just a typical example of how anyone can take advantage of adult basic and adult high school education and demonstrate through one's living its meaningful importance for an individual.

Forestry Club Begins At SCC

Miller stated that "There are presently 10 charter members of the club. We hope to double our size with new students this fall." Any forestry student is eligible to join the organization.

Miller continued, "The purpose of the forestry club is to promote a greater appreciation of forestry products in our area. The club will also promote an appreciation for the use of outdoor recreation resources." According to Miller, the club will distribute promotional literature on our natural resources and how to preserve them.

High School Diploma

For Tabor City native, Cargenia Stewart, a strong determination and positive family back-up are two major factors that helped her to obtain an adult high school diploma through the Programmed Instruction Center and the Tabor City minilab sponsored by the Adult Education Division of the Southeastern Community College. As a result, Mrs. Stewart was among approximately 120 high school graduates recognized in this year's SCC graduation.

Mrs. Stewart stated that she had thought about the Adult High School Diploma Program long before she finally decided to attend. She remembered reading about this SCC program in the local newspapers and hearing some of her friends discuss their successful completion of it.

Even though she had been out of school for 33 years and only completed the 10th grade, Mrs. Stewart decided to discuss the matter with her family. She and her husband have seven children. Six of the children graduated from high school and three have gone on to college to further their education.

The family's encouragement was just what Mrs. Stewart needed. They felt it was time for their mother to have the same opportunity to go to school as they had. Eric, one of the Stewart's older children, was the one who Mrs. Stewart felt gave her the most encouragement to come to Southeastern.

She stated, "Eric had selected SCC to attend in 1970 because the locality of the school was convenient, the quality of the programs offered was high and the tuition was reasonable. Eric was working at Leder Potter's in Tabor City at that time." He needed a school such as Southeastern to attend so that he could combine his education and work. After his graduation in 1971 from SCC with an Associate Degree in Business Administration, Eric attended North Carolina Central University in Durham until he graduated in 1973 with a Bachelor's Degree in Business Administration. Presently, he is an internal auditor at South Carolina National Bank in Columbia, S. C.

Keeping in mind how much Eric had accomplished with the guidance of SCC, Mrs. Stewart decided to enroll in the Adult High School Diploma Program on August 29,1977. She attended the Programmed Instruction Center on campus as well as the minilab at Tabor City High School. During her studies, she kept a philosophy of-"If you've tried and have not won, never stop for crying; all that's great and gone is done by patient trying."

Mrs. Stewart is active in the First Baptist Church in Tabor City, Black Women on the Move Club, N. C. Black Women's Political Caucas, and the hospitility chairman at the church. She was very much concerned how she was to continue participating in her organizations and complete high school, too. She said that the open lab schedule in the PIC and locality of the Tabor City minilab helped solve this problem. She recommended that people take advantage of the campus lab and the extended class labs in the county. Mrs. Stewart said, "So many people need this. It is a wonderful opportunity for anyone to finish high school. All you have to do is put forth an effort. You must have a determination to do; then, do it." During the summer, Mrs. Stewart plans to continue her education by enrolling in a business course at SCC.

Mrs. Cargenia Stewart's graduation this May is the result of her effort, determination and success. She is one of many who can prove to the public that anyone can obtain an education should they really desire to do so.

SCC Has 'Project Apollo' Participants

News Reporter 5-1-78

Recently three Southeastern Community College students and one counselor attended Project Apollo, a national demonstration project for Upward Bound students. Students attending were Danny Livingston of Fairmont Judy Livinston of Fairmont and Eugene Brockington of Fairmont; and Judy Sarvis, counselor in special services upward bound at Southeastern Community College.

Students from Kansas, Indiana, Mississippi and North Carolina participated. Project Apollo is an outdoor educational program. It is a short-term, physically intensive course run in a wilderness environment in all types of weather.

Students and leaders were required to sleep under tents, in sleeping gear. They were provided three ample meals a day. During Apollo activities they were expected to exert maximum effort in hiking over rough terrain, climbing, rapelling, running and canoeing. Each individual backpacked his own equipment, which weighed approximately 20 pounds.

The purpose of Project Apollo was to provide an intensive stress challenge outdoor learning experience designed to solve realistic existing problems. This course offered opportunities to build a positive self-concept and acquisition of outdoor skills not ordinarily available and classes under instructors skilled in outdoor experiential learning.

Project Apollo activites took place in the 170,000 acre national recreational area, the Land Between the Lakes, located 15 miles from the Murray State University campus in Kentucky. Additional supportive services were provided by the Tennessee Valley Authority and Murray University.

Judy Sarvis said, "There were times when I asked myself, 'What am I doing here?', but it was a great experience. I was just one of the group, not a leader. I was an equal of the students. We were taken to an isolated area, given a compass and told to find our way back. We really learned to depend on each other, and found we were capable of doing things we would never have expected to do."

During the trip, students kept individual logs of the trip and a group log. For the five days they were gone they had no radios, television, phone or newspapers. Sarvis added, "Being on our own really gave us a chance to think and see each other in a different light."

While there, they were given a tour of Murray State University and Austin Pea in Clarksville, Tennessee, and returned through the mountains.

SCC Lists Nursing Graduates

News Reporter June 15, 1978

Friends and relatives were welcomed by Dr. W. Ronald McCarter, president of Southeastern. Mrs. Edith Register, Psychiatric Nursing Instructor in the ADN program, spoke to the graduates on "The Success Story." Mrs. Register challenged the graduates to continue to strive for growth in both their professional and personal lives.

Mr. Leon Fox, dean of occupational programs, presented the graduates. They were pinned by Mrs. Betty Ann Page, director of the nursing programs. The new graduates were presented a Nightengale Lamp by Mrs. Betty Edens and Mrs. Linda Cole.

Mrs. Susan Shelley was recognized as the Outstanding Student Nurse for 1978. This award was based on scholastic and leadership abilities of the graduates during their two years as students. Mrs. Shelley was given a trophy by Mrs. Doris McGavisk of the Nursing Department.

All 20 members of the 1978 Association Degree Nursing Program of Southeastern Community College obtained employment before they graduated.

Mrs. Betty Page, director of nursing, said "This, in itself is not unusual. Normally the students know where they will be employed before graduation. The unusual fact was that the 1978 class had obtained employment about 2 months before graduation."

Mrs. Page added "There is a shortage of nurses in this area and neighboring counties. We have had inquiries from hospitals, nursing homes and clinics all over North Carolina and South Carolina wanting to visit the campus to recruit our graduates. But, since all the students were employed, we had to turn down their requests."

Eleven of the graduates were employed by Southeastern General Hospital in Lumberton; two by Columbus County Hospital in Whiteville; three by Loris Community Hospital in Loris, S.C.; one at New Hanover Memorial Hospital in Wilmington; two at Rex Hospital in Raleigh; and one in a private clinic.

Cosmetology Program Follows Fashions

News Reporter 9-18-78

Hair styles, manicures and facials make up a large part of today's fashion world. With cosmetic styles changing as fast as clothing styles, cosmetology has become a leading fashion trend, as well as an all-absorbing lifetime endeavor.

The Cosmetology Program at Southeastern Community College says it is devoted to producing first-rate senior cosmetologist and advanced beauticians, and at the same time keeping its community advised on the present mode of cosmetics and its relation to today's fashion scene.

Betty Walters, coordinator of cosmetology at Southeastern, said that approximately 85 per cent of all SCC cosmetology graduates are placed in or are working in salons.

"At least 25 of last year's 35 graduates have already found work in the cosmetic field," said Mrs. Walters.

Presently, 47 students are enrolled in cosmetology at Southeastern. Of these, 23 are enrolled as beginners and 24 are enrolled as advanced students, with 14 of the latter working as apprentices. Ricky Sullivan, the only male graduate from the Cosmetology Program, is taking refresher courses in order to keep up with the present trend in cosmetic fashions.

The advanced students participate in an open lab, conducted Monday through Friday from 10:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. and on Thursday until 7 p.m. It is in these labs that the students give patron models the benefit of various methods and techniques in cosmetic styling. Many community members as well as the faculty and staff at Southeastern Community College come to the lab where the advanced students perform any type of hair styling, facials or manicures for a small fee.

There are two basic levels of skill which a student must reach before graduation — beginning and advanced.

Beginning students are those who have 300 contact hours of training actually spent in classes and in labs. After having accumulated 900 hours of training a student may be classified as an advanced student. When a student has satisfactorily completed 1200 hours of training, he will be graduated as an advanced beautician.

After graduation a student may obtain a senior cosmetologist classification by serving as an apprentice for six months, collecting 1500 contact hours of training and passing a state examination for certification.

Not only does the Cosmetology Program at Southeastern produce a large number of beauticians for placement in the cosmetic field, but it also provides good public relations within its community. Aside from the open labs, Audra Smith, instructor of cosmetology at Southeastern, said "We service four rest homes in this area." This service is performed by the advanced students in the program as well as the instructors at no cost to the patients.

Preparation for the 1978 Miss Southeastern Community College pageant is now in progress, the candidates have been selected and the emcee has been chosen for the pageant which will be held at 7 p.m. on November 18th in the SCC auditorium.

Teresa Hicks, the present Miss Southeastern Community College, reminisces last year's pageant. "I was really shocked and surprised that I was selected. Being Miss Southeastern Community Southeastern Community College and representing the college in the Carolinas has been an exciting experience for me," says Teresa. "I have had the chance to form numerous lasting friendships and impress upon all ages the importance of a college education. The most impressionable are of course the kids and when making appearances, it is important to put your best foot forward so they will do the same," adds Teresa.

Teresa, a Wilmingtonian, is the daughter of Mr. & Mrs. Vernon J. Hicks and the granddaughter of Mrs. E.H. Schulken also of Wilmington. She is a 1977 graduate of New Hanover High School and is a sophomore in the college transfer program at Southeastern Community College.

Each year, the reigning Miss SCC plays an increasingly important role. Sue Hawks, SCC's Recruitment Coordinator and five-year director of the pageant, states, "Every year Miss SCC receives more invitations for public appearances and her responsibilities increase. Teresa has done an excellent job of fulfilling these responsibilities and has certainly set an example for future title holders." A few of Teresa's appearances have included the Merchant's and Farmer's Exposition in Whiteville, the Tabor City and Chadbourn Christmas parades, the Lumberton Trade and Farm Show, the Chadbourn Strawberry Festival and Parade, the Azalea Festival Parade in Wilmington, and the Southport Fourth of July Parade. Teresa also participated in the Miss Leggs and Bikini Wahine Pageants and rode on the Hawaiian Tropic float in the Sun-Fun Parade.

Teresa's enthusiasm wanes when she remembers she will soon crown a new Miss SCC but realizes such grand experiences were meant to be shared by others. "Any girl selected should not let it go to her head. She should just be herself and use her own personality," advises Teresa of future Miss SCC's.

Contestants will compete in the areas of streetwear, swimsuit, talent and eveningwear. Interviews will also be held the day of the pageant. Admission at the door will be $1.50 for general public. SCC students will be admitted free with valid ID cards.

Program Features Student Counselors

Tabor City Tribune 12-13-78

The student counselors for the Resources for Student Learning (RSL) program at Southeastern Community College were recently honored at a dinner held on the college campus. These students counsel about 200 RSL students in survival skills (campus orientation) and other special training which help them succeed in college. Nanette Pais, coordinator of student counseling and psychology instructor at SCC, refers to the student counselor system as a "big brother" system. "This program involves students who help other students in academic training," Pais adds.

The counselors, twelve in all, are trained through a special 33-hour training program held during the last week in August. This training program provides each student counselor with special education in teaching skills as well as academic counseling. These counselors work with the RSL students one day each week and as needed; one student counselor works only with foreign students.

The student counseling service began in the fall of 1977 at SCC. In December of 1977, Nanette Pais and Winnie Cooke made a presentation of their ideas in Washington, D. C. at the National Conference on the Improvement of Post Secondary Education; both will make another presentation on Dec. 6 and 7 in San Francisco at the same conference.

The student counseling program at Southeastern is not costly which only adds to its efficiency. "There's no pay involved in this program," Ms. Pais states. "Just being able to help other students is rewarding enough for the counselors."

At the dinner held in honor of these students, President W. Ronald McCarter stated, "These students are serving on a voluntary basis and providing important auxiliary assistance to our professional staff." Dr. McCarter remarked to the students that he was particularly proud of their efforts to serve inasmuch as they had been carefully screened for this assignment, which requires much training and practice on their part. "You are to be congratulated for being students who are willing to do more than the minimum requirement to get a degree at SCC, but are likewise willing to provide a service to others during your enrollment here. The experience you obtain will be invaluable to you throughout your future," said Dr. McCarter.

13 Area Law Officers Complete New Course

Marshall Shepherd, director of the criminal justice department, said basic police science schools held previously were 160 hours, but the recent graduating class is the first to be held at SCC since the Criminal Justice and Training Standards Council requirements for 240 hours took effect.

The increase of 80 hours included 20 additional hours on the firing range, a course in hostage situations, intervention into domestic disturbances, police driver training and the addition of cardiopulmonary resuscitation to the first aid training.

Shepherd said the new requirements also stipulate that no instructor will teach more than 35 percent of the 260-hour class. He feels that the requirement is an improvement, allowing for more specilized instructors.

In addition to Shepherd, there were 16 other instructors. They included personnel from Wilmiongton Police Department, New Hanover Sheriff's Department. State ABC officers, instructors from the Training and Standards Council and Cape Fear Tech, and local officers Sgt. C.I. Stroud of the State Highway Patrol, Det. Sgt. Clarence Brown of Whiteville Police Department, Jimmy Ferguson of the N.C. Department of Motor License and Theft Division, and the Rev. Tommy Beaver.

Members of the class included Nancy Barden and Lottie Williams of Whiteville Police Department; Harold Rains of Columbus County Sheriff's Departent; Howard Faulk of Robeson County Sheriff's Department; Sam Solomon and Charles Cole of Sunset Beach Police Department; Jerry Smith, Charles Brown, Lynn Todd and Liston Hawes of Brunswick County Sheriff's Department; Henry Bryant of White Lake Police Department; Freddie McKoy of Elizabethtown Police Department; and Bobby Wagner of Fairmont Police Department.

SCC Firing Range Has Wide Use

The firing range at Southeastern Community College has become widely used by law enforcement agencies as well as law enforcement training students at SCC. The reason for its wide usage is because it is one of the most complete firing ranges in this part of the state. Marshall Shepherd, Coordinator of the Criminal Justice Department at SCC, will attest to the range's versatility.

According to Shepherd, when the firing range was built in 1973, it was not very advanced. "All we had was a mound of dirt," he explains. "There weren't any lanes."

Now the firing range has six fifty-yard lanes with stationary targets; a cement ground-level platform is placed across the lanes at distances of seven, 15 and 25 yards from the targets that serves as a distant marker; a covered platform is placed 50 yards from the targets. In addition, the lanes have recently been lighted to enable target practice at night; these lights can be varied from complete darkness to a complete flood in order to provide different types of shooting difficulties.

By the spring quarter, Shepherd plans to have ten fifty-yard lanes with moving targets that will be built so that one person can control them. "We are moving away from stationary shooting," Shepherd explains. "It is important to know when to shoot and what to shoot. This will be the primary purpose of using the moving targets and lighted lanes.

Having served in law enforcement for 17 years before coming to Southeastern, Shepherd realizes the importance of reaction - type shooting. "Using rapid fire makes the student aware of the fact that he must reload his weapon," state Shepherd.

Columbus County News 12-20-79

"This helps to make him more reactive."

A one-hour credit course in firearms safety is offered through the Criminal Justice Department at SCC for anyone who wishes to learn the safe way to handle firearms; no experience is needed to take this course. This same course is also offered through the Adult Education Division for non-credit. The course involves six hours of classroom training and five hours of work on the range. According to Shepherd, most of the students enrolled in this class are women.

In addition to the firearms safety class, the Adult Education Division offers a non-credit course for law enforcement officer. In this situation, each officer spends six to eight hours practicing firing after which he fires for qualification. In order to qualify, the officer must score 180 out of 300 possible points. The person is qualified as an expert shooter by scoring 280 points.

In qualifying, each officer must fire a total of 60 rounds from the seven, 15, 25 and 50-yard lines against time. These rounds must be fired from standing (using right and left hands), sitting, kneeling and prone positions. Reloading is necessary between each six rounds.

The N.C. Highway State Patrol, as well as other state and local law enforcement organizations, uses the SCC firing range for firearm qualification. The qualification requirements are the same for the Adult Education course.

The firing range at Southeastern Community College has come a long way from its beginning in 1973 and it is still improving. "Based on the ranges I've been involved with," states Shepherd, "this is probably one of he best ranges in this part of the country."

SCC To Present "Raisin In The Sun"

Brunswick Beacon 2-2-78

Southeastern's winter quarter drama class will bring Lorraine Hansberry's dramatic "A Raisin In The Sun" to the SCC auditorium stage Thursday and Friday nights, February 2 and 3. Curtain time each night is 8 o'clock sharp and admission is free. The general public is invited.

"Raisin" is the touching story of a post-war family trying to break the grip of "ghetto-itis" by using "Big Walter" Younger's insurance money to buy a home of their own out in a suburb where there will be a little sunshine and, as Mama Younger puts it, "a little yard where Travis can play."

The dream almost fails to come true, and the changes that occur between the dream and the realization of it are the human triumphs and failings that have made this play a great favorite for two decades.

Principal roles are played by Robert Young, Martha Young, Debbie George, Arnetha Moore, Gino Frink, Sherlock Graham-Haynes, Cary Godwin, William Harper, and George Collins. The play is directed by the class instructor, Curt Welb rne, with Doug McRae, , a Southeastern student from Tabor City, serving as stage manager.

The production is another outgrowth of SCC's Artist-in-Residence program. Longtime theatre professional Howard Whitfield of New York City is this year's Artist-in-Residence and has consulted with the drama class throughout the academic year. Mr. Welborne stated that there was no way the class could have undertaken a production of "Raisin's" magnitude without Mr. Whitfield's continuing help and encouragement.

Play At College Postponed; New Date Not Set

Tabor City Tribune
Feb. 22 1978

The Southeastern Community Players have postponed their production of "YOU CAN'T TAKE IT WITH YOU". The play was to have been presented February 16 and 17 in the college auditorium. However, plagued by illness and cast drop-outs, a complete cast had not been assembled in time for dress rehearsal. Since the Moss Hart and George S. Kaufman comedy requires practiced interplay between the characters, a later date will be set. It is the goal of the group to deliver good productions, not just "put on plays".

A particularly fine cast for featured roles had been assembled, including Orren Pickard, Marguerite Sprott, Jenny McKennon Wright, Sam Stell, Herschel Walsh, Sandra Martin, Steven Ivey and Becky and Vern Marlin. It is hoped that they and Mary Taft, Ricky Enzor, Steven Graham, Leretto Worthen, Robert Young, Doug McRoe, Jr., Bob King and Kemp Shuping will be available when a new date has been selected.

SCC Offers Play This Week

News Reporter 2-1-78

The Southeastern Community College winter quarter drama class will perform Lorrraine Hansberry's drama, "A Raisin in the Sun," Thursday and Friday, Feb. 2 and 3, at the college.

The play will be performed both nights at 8 o'clock sharp, and there is no admission charge and public is invited to attend. The performances will be in the SCC auditorium.

"A Raisin in the Sun" is the story of a post-war family trying to break the grip of "ghetto-itis" using "Big Walter" Younger's insurance money to buy a home of their own in a suburb where there will be a little sunshine and, as Mama Younger puts it, "a little yard where Travis can play."

The dream almost fails to come true, and the changes that occur between the dream and its realization are the human triumphs and failings that have made this play a favorite of audiences for two decades, a class spokesman said.

The principal roles in the production will be performed by Robert Young, Martha Young, Debbie George, Arnetha Moore, Gino Frink, Sherlock Graham-Haynes, Cary Godwin, William Harper and George Collins. The play is directed by the class instructor, Curt Welborne, with Doug McRae Jr. of Tabor City, also an SCC student, serving as stage manager.

The production is an outgrowth of the Artist-In-Residence program at North Carolina community colleges, including SCC. Howard Whitfield, a long-time resident of New York City and the current artist-in-residence for the school, has consulted and worked with the drama class throughout the academic year. Welborne said that the class could not have undertaken a production of the magnitude of "A Raisin in the Sun" without the continuing help and encouragement of Whitfield.

SCC To Present Play "You Can't Take It With You"

The Brunswick Beacon Feb 16 3

There will be many new faces on the stage when the Southeastern Community Players present "You Can't Take It With You". The play will open Thursday and Friday, February 16 and 17 at 8 p.m. in the auditorium at Southeastern Community College.

While many members of the cast of "The Trial Of Mary Dugan" will also be seen in the current production, most of the principal roles will be filled by newcomers to the group. Orren Pickard, playing Grandpa Vanderhof, is no stranger to local audiences who will remember his performance as the stage manager in "Our Town" presented by the Arts Council last season. He is considered a new and valued members of the recently organized group.

Marguerite Sprott, playing Penelope Sycamore, is not only new to the players but is a recent arrival in Columbus County. Jenny McKinnon Wright of Tabor City; Samuel C. Stell of Whiteville; Mary S. Taft, Becky and Vernon Marlin, Herschel Walsh and Robert Priest of the SCC Faculty will also be treading our boards for the first time. Those members of the "Mary Dugan" cast who will be appearing include Ricky Enzor, Steven Graham, Doug McRae, Jr., Robert King, Steven Ivey, and Sandra Martin.

With this second production about to be unveiled, the Southeastern Community Players consider that they have taken a big step toward sponsoring Live Theater in Columbus County.

Players Change Name

News Reporter 4-6-78

At the Board of Directors meeting of the Southeastern Community Players on Wednesday, March 22, it was determined to change to the group's name to "The Southeastern Players."

"The directors and Howard Whitfield, advisor to the group, felt that the new name would more clearly indicate that the group was not only for Southeastern Community College students and personnel, but also a group for all people of the community," a spokesman said.

In other business the board made plans to present four one-act plays on the nights of May 11 and 12. One play has already been chosen, and tryouts and rehearsal will begin immediately.

The play that has been chosen is the "Giants Stair" by W.D. Steele. It is a drama set in the North Carolina mountains. Anyone interested in working with this play or any of the others is asked to call Howard Whitfield at 642-7141.

'Star-Spangled Girl'

Has Fast Paced Style

How did Charles Dickens, a master at this kind of thing, ever find such wonderful apt, distinctive, memorable names as David Copperfield, Mr. Pickwick, Mr. Micawder, and Steerforth? What sound instinct guided Edna Gurber to call her "Showboat" heroine Magnolia, and to name Nolia's mother Parthy Ann Hawks, and Meredith Willson to choose the simple name of Harold Hill for his rapscallion "Music Man?"

Clearly Neil Simon must have been in a small dilemma naming the characters in his comedy, "The Star-Spangled Girl," featured in the Southeastern Community College Foundation Dinner - Theatre on Saturday evening, April 1. He didn't have many characters to name — only three.

For the two men of the play, the protest minded young magazine editors to be played by John Westbrook and Paul Pierce, of the Texas based touring company, Alpha-Omega Players, Simon was probably up a tree for names and must have idly picked up a map or a copy of Lovejoy's College Guide for Inspiration. For the names he gave them are inevitably from one or the other sources. One is called Andy Hobart and the other is Norman Cornell. Both last names are those of colleges in upstate New York, Hobart being a small college in the Fingers Lake region with less than a thousand students, and Cornell being the 12,000 student giant of the adjoining Finger Lake — "far above the Cayuaga's Waters."

It couldn't be a coincidence, these two names of Simon's characters being the same as the New York colleges. It's a good thing he had only needed two such names or other characters might have turned up with names like Bard, Colgate, and Rensselaer Polytechnic.

But for his third character, the girl of his title, to be played by Cynthia Coleman, Simon completely abandoned the collegiate nomenclature and went off to something more memorable. He called her Sophie Rouschmeyer. A name that's just a touch of ludicrous, and betoking a German accent. It is seemingly just right for a red-cheeked wholesome gal with all the correct patriotic sentiments, who sternly disapproves the young anti-establishment lads who live across the hall in her apartment house, who reluctantly fall in love with them.

J. Herman Leder, Honorary Chairman of the Foundation's fundraising event, stated "Nobody had to go to college to appreciate 'The Star-Spangled Girl.' It was an eight month long hit in New York when it was first produced there. Dexter H. Riley, the show's producer, guest director Kenneth Latimer, of the Dallas theatre Center, has given it a fast paced style and made the most out of these characters with memorial names."

Leder stated that the $25 per plate contribution will be one that is well-spent. The Dinner-Theatre activities include a steak dinner, 25 prizes, a laugh filled evening with the Alpha-Omega Players.

OWN A SUMMER PLACE? HOW TO RENT OUT YOUR VACATION HOME, MAKE A TIDY PROFIT AND SHELTER SOME —OR ALL—OF IT FROM TAX

There's a boom in vacation home rentals! If you own a vacation home, you know you can get top rent in season. Infact, you may be able to get enough rent to carry the home for the entire year. In other words, a home you bought for pleasure may now have turned into an excellent investment.

There have been some recent tax law changes in the vacation home area. They have been described as "crackdowns" on vacation home rentals. To clear up any confusion, let's set one thing straight: Most vacation home owners are — untouched by tax law changes.

Vacation homeowners who clear a profit on the rentals are not affected by the "crackdowns." The new rules don't apply where your rent exceeds your expenses (operating expenses and depreciation during the rental period plus a pro rate portion of you mortgage interest and property taxes). These expenses are fully deductible and can be used to shelter your rent from tax.

The tax changes come into play only if you show a tax loss — your expenses exceed your rent. But even then, they apply only if you use your home for personal reasons more than 14 days during the year (or 10 per cent of the time you rent out if that's greater). In this case the new rules say that the total of your rental expense deductions cannot exceed your rental income.

Put another way, you still have TAX-FREE INCOME — You can deduct your expenses up to the amount of your rental income, so your rental income is completely tax-free. The rules simply prevent you from using your excess deductions — your tax loss — to offset non-rental income.

Let's say, for one reason or another, it looks as if you will have a tax loss this year.

WHAT TO DO — The most obvious move is to postpone as many rental expenses as possible (repairs, for example). You cut your loss for 1978. Barring that, keep a close tab on whatever personal use you make of the property so that you keep your personal use below the 14 day 10 per cent time limit. If you do, you can use your tax loss to shelter some highly taxed income from other sources — salary, divident and so forth.

A final note: If you rent for less than 15 days a year, you disregard the rental for tax purposes. Neither your rental income nor your expenses are reported on your tax return.

NEW LAW STRATEGY: HOW TO OFFSET A NEW SOCIAL SECURITY BOMBSHELL

The new Social Security law may cost you more than you realize. You know about the higher Social Security taxes. But the law may also cost you thousands after you reach retirement age.

Background: There's always been a limit on how much you can earn in a year without forfeiting Social Security benefits. But a special break allowed executives to work part of the year and draw full Social Security checks for the other part — even if they earned more than the yearly limit.

NEW LAW BLOCKBUSTER — A little-publicized provision in the law eliminates this break (except in the year you retire). Starting this year, as soon as you exceed the yearly earnings test, you forfeit benefits for the entire year, not just for the months you were actually working. That is, you lose $1 in benefits for every $2 you earn.

This can mean a substantial loss of income during your retirement years. You may have intended to go into semi-retirement at age 65. Your company would pay you, say, $10,000 for two-months work, and you would receive Social Security during the other ten months. Now you can't do this — without losing your Social Security income.

However, by setting up a deferred compensation arrangeement you can still supplement your Social Security income without losing any benefits. And you reap this BIG DOLLAR PAYOFF - (1) You continue to draw a salary of thousands of dollars after retiring. And (2) You still collect every penny of Social Security benefits — in addition to the deferred payments. (3) The deferred compensation, when paid, is not subject to social security tax.

Example: Mr. Bradley, age 55, is in line for a $10,000 raise. However, instead of a current raise, the company decides to pay him the money after he retires? say $10,000 a year for ten years. Result—When Bradley retires, he collects full Social Security benefits, plus his $10,000 a year.

Reason: The Social Security law says that, for benefit purposes, the salary was "earned" during Bradley's working years. Since the money is not "earnings" when received, Bradley is entitled to his full Social Security.

Added break: Deferred compensation received after retirement is not "wages" either. So the payments are free of Social Security tax — both for you and your company.

(1) The income tax on your deferred income isn't paid until you actually receive the money.

PROPOSED NEW RULE — The Government has just proposed a new regulation that would make it more difficult to defer income tax when you defer compensation. Comments have been requested, and a hearing will be held before the regulation is made final (if it is). In the meantime, deferred compensation arrangements are still being set up. We'll keep you posted.

(2) Deferred compensation payments qualify as personal service income and so are not taxed at more than 50 per cent.

(3) Your Social Security payments are completely free of income tax.

Getting back to the Social Security law, there were some other changes which affected executives who work after age 65. These changes will mean MORE RETIREMENT INCOME SOONER — The yearly earnings limit (now $4,000) will rise each year until it reaches $6,000 in 1982. And starting in 1982, you can earn any amount of money without loss of benefits at age 70 (current law: age 72).

Note the name of Sophie Rouschmeyer and remember it well. It's the name of the girl to be played by Cynthia Coleman–the girl in the title in Neil Simon's comedy, "The Star-Spangled Girl," coming to Whiteville on April 1st. It's a name that's as likely to enter our language as much as Mrs. Malaprop from Sheridan's "The Rivals," Billy DAwn from "Born Yesterday" and Gaylord Ravenal from "Showboat." Distinctive as a name and referring to a distinctive person.

But if somebody calls you "a regular Sophie Rouschmeyer," you may have to think twice to decide whether you have been flattered or insulted. In "The Star-Spangled Girl" Sophie is pretty, wholesome, athletic, 100 percent patriotic American–and what's wrong with that? As a pair of protest young fellows John Westbrook and Paul Pierce (Norman and Andy) think there's alot wrong with Sophie.

A square, a stupid square too, in their eyes. They may be in love with her but they don't approve of her. Suppose someone does call you a regular Sophie Rouschmeyer--will you be pleased or annoyed? Attend the Second Annual Southeastern Community College Foundation Dinner-Theatre on Saturday evening, April 1st, and decide for yourself.

J. Herman Leder, Honorary Chairman of the fund-raising event, urges you to join us and laugh it up. "The Star-Spangled Girl" is loaded with laughs. Leder stated, "It is Simon's special talent to get fun out of people's reconciliation to incompatible partners, and indeed we laugh."

The Dinner-Theatre activities will include a delicious steak dinner, valuable door prizes, and a delightful performance of the "Star-Spangled Girl" by the Alpha-Omega Players, a professional theatrical company from Rockport, Texas. Your $25 per plate contribution--less value of goods received--is tax-deductible. For reservations, contact Jack Ervin at 642-7141, Ext. 42.

A comedy by Neil Simon, America's most acclaimed writer of stage comedies, is coming to Whiteville on Saturday, April 1. It is "The Star-Spangled Girl," produced by the Repertory Theatre of America and starring the nationally known Alpha-Omega Players from Texas. It is being presented locally by the Southeastern Community College Foundation.

J. Herman Leder, honorary chairman, said "The 'Star-Spangled Girl' is a comedy that spins its fun out of the presentday tendencies from bright young men to dedicate themselves to dissenting from old established American traditions. John Westbrook and Norman Cornall (Andy and Norman) will portray a pair living in poverty in San Francisco in order to publish a magazine devoted to social protest.

"Their frantic efforts to keep their magazine going are hilariously complicated by the intrusion of Sophie Rauschmeyer, a cute cornpone Southern girl played by Cynthia Coleman. She is a former member of the U.S. Olympic Swimming Team, who is so thoroughly American that she is schandalized by their irrelevance for her patriotic ideals.

"Norman falls so helplessly in love with her that he is unable to write any more heretical articles under his various pseudonyms. Andy's efforts to extract him from his mooning state lead to his own dramatic entrapment, as hilarious complications ensue."

"The Star-Spangled Girl" was one of Broadway's biggest comedy hits of the 1966-67 season, when it drew thronging audiences for an eight-month run.

The production will be in Whiteville for one night only, Saturday, April 1. Sponsored by Southeastern Community College Foundation, the dinner theatre begins at 6:30 p.m. at Southeastern Community College. For reservations, call Jack Ervin at 642-7141, Ext. 42.

THE SCC FOUNDATION will again offer a dinner-theatre as a money-raising event to benefit Southeastern Community College. The SCC Foundation is sponsoring a dinner-Theatre on Saturday, April 1, from 6:30 to 10:30 p.m. The event will be held in the SCC student lounge and the auditorium, and will feature a delicious charcoal steak dinner with all the trimmings; "The Star-Spangled Girl," a nationally acclaimed production by a professional cast, the Alpha-Omega Players; door prizes; and much fun and fellowship.

The SCC Foundation Board of Directors hopes to make this fund-raising event an entertaining evening for all. Dr. Ronald McCarter, president of SCC, stated, "We are always asking for straight-out donations from friends in the community, but this time we are offering food, entertainment, and fun in gratitude for your $25.00 per plate contribution. How often do we hear a 'there's nothing to do in Columbus County'? How often do we go to Lumberton, Myrtle Beach, or Raleigh for this type of an evening? The board wants to provide it right here and raise funds for the students besides.

"Our college provides constant elevation of the educational level of our entire community adults from age 18 to 80. We bring over $5 million per year into our community from state, federal, and external private sources. The college is both an academic and an economic asset. Without funds raised locally by our Foundation, much of this could not happen. An investment in our SCC Foundation never stops yielding dividends to all of us. We hope all of our friends and supporters will join us on April 1st. We believe you will find the evening and the contribution well-spent!"

The Atlanta Ballet will present a performance at Southeastern Community College at 8 p.m. Thursday in the college auditorium.

Tickets are available in advance at the college. Tickets will cost $3 each, and will also be available at the performance.

The Atlanta Ballet Company, founded by Dorothy Alexander in 1929, is a part of the founding of the ballet movement in America and was the first ballet company to be formed outside of New York. As the first regional ballet company, the Atlanta Ballet in 1956 hosted the first regional ballet festival and was instrumental in establishing the guidelines and precedents which have led to the formation of over 400 regional ballet companies throughout five regional jurisdictions, and is one of four major companies of the National Association for Regional Ballet.

In February 1973 Governor Jimmy Carter signed a proclamation, initiated by the Georgia Legislature, naming the Atlanta Ballet the State Ballet Company of Georgia.

In June 1973 the Atlanta Ballet Touring Ensemble was formed under the artistic direction of Robert Barnett. The touring ensemble is a member of the National Endowment for the Arts Dance Program and performs residencies throughout the country.

This year the dancers will travel more than 30,000 miles.

The sudden and far-reaching success of the touring ensemble has been reflected in the many and varied festival invitations. In 1975 the Alaska Festival of Music, in Anchorage, hosted the Atlanta Ballet as the guest performing dance company. The Atlanta Ballet Company is the only ballet company to have extensively toured Alaska.

During the summer of 1975, the touring ensemble performed for five evenings of the Flagstaff Summer Festival in Arizona and the summer of 1976 found the company in San Rafael, Calif., where they enjoyed a two-week residency at the Forest Meadows Center of the Performing Arts.

Steak A La Memory For Dinner-Theatre

News Reporter 3-27-78

Can a couple find happiness together if they hold different political opinions? Even if they are greatly attracted to each other physically?

This is the question that is hilariously raised, and answered, in the comedy called "The Star-Spangled Girl," which is being presented at the dinner-theatre sponsored by the Southeastern Community College Foundation on the college campus Saturday evening, April 1.

The Southeastern Community College Foundation has contracted with the Alpha-Omega Players, a national touring company from Rockport, Texas, to produce the play. Our own local known Billy Memory of Memory's Super Market has been contracted to provide a delicious steak dinner.

"The Star-Spangled Girl" is a comedy by Neil Simon, the most successful Broadway playwright in the last 50 years. The comedy brings in to amorous and political conflict a pretty, athletic girl and a couple of intellectual young men who put out one of those little protest magazines that keep telling their sparse readers how terrible the establishment is.

All the conditions are wrong for romance to flower among these three. The girl with the bulldog patriotism considers the young men who are her across-the-hall neighbors, and the magazine as nothing less than subversive of the good old red-white-and blue principles she was brought up on. The earnest young men, in their dedication to belittling everything in present-day society, thinks she's a square, but a triangular romance develops between them all the same — this being Neil Simon's sly, antic way of proving that love is not a matter of intellect but emotions. With its spoof of protest movements, "The Star-Spangled Girl" was one of the biggest comedy hits in New York during this 1966-67 season running there for over eight months.

Kenneth Latimer, resident artist at the famed Dallas Theatre Center, is the director in charge of cashing in on all the comedy laugh lines and Dexter H. Riley, executive director of the Repertory Theatre of America, is the producer.

J. Herman Leder, honorary chairman of the fund-raising event, urges each of you to join in the fun and at the same time, help students in our community.

COMPANY TAX SAVER: HOW TO SET UP A TAX-FREE TUITION PAYMENT PLAN

If your company has a tuition payment plan for its employees — or is thinking about setting one up — there's important news for you from the Government.

Background: Some companies pick up the tab for their employees' education expenses, but only if they take courses that are job-related. Other companies don't have any restrictions — they pay for all of their employees' education expenses. The latter approach is usually the more expensive for the company. Now, it's going to be more expensive than ever.

NEW GOVERNMENT RULING — Tuition fees paid under a plan that covers any course an employee wants to take are subject to income tax withholding, Social Security taxes and unemployment taxes. Reason: The payments are compensatory in nature. They're merely a substitute for cash wages (Rev. Rul 78-184, IRB 1978-20).

You may want to take a fresh look at your company's tuition plan in light of the new ruling. Instead of paying tuition across the board, you may want to adopt this tax-free alternative.

If your plan pays for job-related courses only, you will be better off taxwise. Reason: The payments are free of income tax withholding and payroll taxes. The Government says such a plan is not compensatory. It's designed mainly to benefit your company by improving the job skills of its employees.

Caution: (1) To qualify as tax-free, the tuition must be paid directly to the school, or if the employee is reimbursed, he must account to your company for the tuiton expense. (2) Pay only for courses that contribute to the employee's effectiveness on his present job. Courses that prepare him for a new job or enable him merely to meet the minimum standards for the job he now has aren't "job-related."

Alpha-Omega Players appearing in the "Star Spangled Girl" sponsored by the SCC Foundation on April 1.

Entertainment, Dinner, Prizes

Love and idealogy get mixed, but not blended in "The Star-Spangled Girl," being presented by the Alpha-Omega Players from Texas at Southeastern Community College on Saturday evening, April 1st.

"The Star-Spangled Girl" presented locally by the Southeastern Community College Foundation, is a comedy by Neil Simon, author of such other hits as "Barefoot in the Park," "The Odd Couple," and "Plaza Suite." The player's title refers to an alluring girl of athletic prowess and proper patriotic principles who moves into an apartment and becomes a disturbing influence on a pair of young men who live across the hall.

Cynthia Coleman, of the nationally acclaimed Alpha-Omega Touring Company, will be seen as the girl with the pro-American sentiments, Sophie Rouesch-meyer, and John Westbrook and Paul Pierce will play the young heretics, Andy and Norman, who learn from her that love must be reckoned with while pursuing their social criticisms.

Dexter H. Riley, executive director of the players, has brought in guest director, Kenneth Latimer, from the internationally famous Dallas Theatre Center, to direct Simon's fast-paced comedy.

J. Herman Leder, Honorary Chairman, urges each of you to make your reservations early for a fun-filled evening. Leder stated, "The dinner - theatre is a fund-raising event sponsored by The SCC Foundatin. Your contribution will not only assist the work of the Foundation, but you will also be able to enjoy a delicious steak dinner, have a chance at 25 very nice door prizes, and be entertained by a professional theatre company."

Concert To Feature Mike Cross

News Reporter April 10 1978

Mike Cross will appear in concert at Southeastern Community College Wednesday, at 8 p.m. in the college auditorium. He has been warmly received by audiences throughout the southeastern United States.

The concert at Southeastern is being jointly sponsored by the Performing Arts Committee of the college and Stereo 99 WENC Radio in Whiteville. General admission tickets are $4 and student tickets are $3. Southeastern Community College students may buy tickets in advance with their I.D. card at the receptionist's desk in the Main Lobby for $2.

There was a time when only a handful of people in Chapel Hill, showed up faithfully whenever Cross played a local club. Now, most of the south and midwest stand in line to crowd in small clubs and concert halls to see this fiddling storyteller they have heard so much about.

Cross plays guitar — and fiddle as well — traveling from place to place in the country delighting audiences with 12-string bottleneck blues, Irish jigs and reels and old time mountain fiddle tunes plus a wealth of his own folk and country flavored songs, together with a kind of backwoods humor characteristics of Will Rogers and Mark Twain.

Cross said, "When I first started playing music around Chapel Hill, it never crossed my mind that I would be doing it for years, I just thought music would give me something to do while I decided what it was that I wanted to do with my life. I just wanted to try to get beter at writing songs, at playing a guitar, and the fiddle when I took it up. I was actually surprised to realize that for two years music had been paying all my expenses, putting clothes on my body and food on the table for my wife Laurie and myself."

Music is a vehicle for the stories he tells, and his stories are not always for tender ears. "I have this strange image of myself as being born to be an old man," Cross says with typical humor. "Even when I was a young fellow, I always felt old. Not senile, but old . . . my stories are what I would tell if I were an old, grandfather type rocking on the porch smoking my pipe. People want happiness; they want you to give them happiness. I'm operating on the premise that we should enjoy life while we seek an understanding of life. That's really what my songs and stories are saying."

College Chief Given Confidence Vote

NRO 1-23-78

At a regular meeting of the SCC Board of Trustees on January 19, President Ronald McCarter informed the board that Ben Fountain, president of the Community College System, had received a vote of confidence by the North Carolina Board of Education at their January meeting.

This followed a series of rumors and news article speculations in Raleigh that Dr. Fountain may not be retained. Dr. McCarter expressed gratitude for the state board clarifying their position. "We need strong leadership in the Community College System, not the disorganization that such speculation generates."

With Chairman Willard Small presiding, the Board of Trustees heard a report from Phil Simmons, coordinator of Human Resources Development (HRD) who explained the benefit occuring to those finishing this program at SCC. Students whose combined pre-training income was only $42,610, now enjoy a post-training income of $105.422. HRD is a program to train the unemployed in motivation and job-acquisition skills, as well as occupational skills.

Vivian Floyd and Lauren George, instructors, presented the Child Development program to the Board of Trustees. This program is a one-or two-year curriculum designed to teach students how to be aides in the operation of child development centers, or teacher aides in the public schools! A new program, reading, teaching technology, is now being developed to provide aides in public school reading programs.

Other business of the meeting included routine approval of personnel and financial transactions, discussion of the staffing process; and distribution of information and announcements.

Other board members present were J. Herman Leder, Richard Maxwell, Billy Hooks, Mrs. Myrtle Soles, C.R. Ward, Henry Wyche, and Sam Koonce.

Rams Scare Chowan Braves But Bow In Twin-Overtime

By JIGGS POWERS
(NR Sports Editor)

6-0 IN LOOP

Coach Jerry Smith's Braves managed the twin-overtime victory over Coach Harry Foley's Rams by the hardest of scraps as the Southeastern outfit came close to breaking the unbeaten (6-0) ETJCC record from Murfreesboro, leading by as much as 7 points in the first half, but the depth of the Smith-coached crew stood out as they were able to keep fresh men in, at least long enough at times to rest the major stars to give them the energy to come through at the opportune times.

RAMS LEADERS

Coach Foley's Rams had top leaders in Noland Pearsall of North Myrtle Beach, S.C. and Louis Simeon of St. Thomas, Virgin Islands, each of whom poured in 25 points and Union High's George Murphy with 20 more. Clarence Ganus, the ETJCC scoring leader hit well below his 21.4 average with 13 points, while Marcell Hawkins of Whiteville, had 12 markers. Also scoring well for Chowan besides Drawhorne were William Bogues with 18 markers, Robin Hoey and Ronald Williams — he's from Union High, too — each with 16 points, and Greg Dawson with 14.

After the game here, Southeastern was 8-6 overall and 2-3 within the conference. Coach Smith's Braves are now 13-2 overall, 6-0 in the loop and 11-2 within JUCO

Rams Scare

RAMS IN FRONT

Simeon hit from the right corner for the Rams at 19:53 and Pearsall added a basket from the left side at 18:59 for a 4-0 SCC lead before Drawhorne had a bucket for Chowan at 18:25. A basket by Hoey followed by two Bogues' baskets turned the lead to the Braves at 17:18, 8-7, but Murphy's bucket at 16:33 turned it back to the Rams, 9-8 and Ray Bland added a 20-footer at 15:59 and the locals led until Drawhorne's turnshot at 15:23 made it 12-11 Chowan. The lead swapped hands a couple of more times and finally Ganus' jumper from the left of the circle at 11:07 made it 24-22 SCC and shots by Murphy, Hawkins, Murphy again, a foul shot by Pearsall at 9:14 made it 31-24. A steal and layup by Hoey with 6:00 minutes in the half gave Chowan a momentary 34-33 lead but Simeon's rebound bucket at 5:37 turned into a three-pointer and a Rams' advantage of 36-31.

AHEAD AT HALF

Leading by 42-36, the Rams had Chowan barrel back on baskets by Dawson, Randy Bell, a three-pointer by Drawhorne, and two more baskets by the latter star and only a Simeon jumper with 0:19 left enabled SCC to have a 46-45 lead at the halftime.

Chowan took a 51-50 lead at 18:28 in the second half on Drawhorne's shot but another Simeon 3-pointer at 18:02 gave the Rams another lead that they held until Hoey tied it at 57-all with 16:30 left then Pearsall's basket sent SCC back in front, 63-61 at 14:52.

90-90 TIE

The score was tied at 68-68, 70-70, 72-all, 74, 76, 78, 80, 82, and then Dawson popped in a jumper from the left side at 5:13 and it was 84-82 and Smith's crew went into the old Carolina "stutter" and held the ball until there was but 2:45 and the Braves were called for the five-second rule and Ganus controlled the tap for Southeastern on the ensuing jump and he later missed a shot at 2:13. Hoey's 1-and-1 put the Murfreesboro entry out front, Simeon's foul brace at 0:30 made it 90-88, SCC and the Rams got the ball on another Brave violation with 0:21 and held for the good shot but lost it and Pearsall's basket with 0:07 left made it 90-90. SCC had a chance but the regulation ended at 90-all when Ganus took a shot that bounced off the rim at the horn.

FIRST OVERTIME

Pearsall also had a goal-tending basket with 4:07 left in the first 5-minute overtime to give the Rams a 92-90 lead but Chowan used a steal in the backcourt and snobird by Hoey and layup to tie it, 92-all and a 2:42 basket by Ron Williams for a 94-92 lead. Murphy's basket at 2:18 and Ganus' swisher from the right side at 1:42 sent the Rams ahead again at 98-94 but a 1-and-1 by Drawhorne at 1:37 tied it, 98-98 and another basket by Ganus at 1:11 left the Rams ahead, 98-98 and then Ron Williams hit at 0:45 for a 98-all tie and that's what it was when the first overtime ended as Simeon missed at 0:02 after the 10-second rule had caught the stalling Braves in the backcourt.

BRAVES WIN IT

With time running out and Chowan handling the ball most of the time, which resulted in Rams' fouls in order to get the ball, Bogues hit a 1-and-1 at 1:29; Robert Gregory added another at 0:32 and Hoey still another at 0:17 to run the Chowan margin to 109-101 but Wyanto Harlee swished in a Rams' basket with just 0:09 left to cut the margin to 3 at 109-106 and that's the way it closed when Pearsall's shot from the back of the circle missed at the final buzzer.

Harry Foley Confident Of SCC's Rams Ability

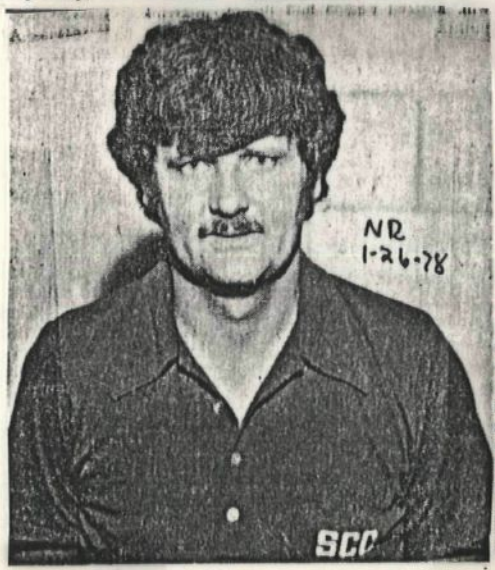
By PHYLLIS BLACKWELL
Southeastern Community College Basketball Coach Harry Foley, has started his second season and seems confident and assured of his team's talent and ability. He said, "They aren't as tall this year as last year, but they are quicker. Last year there were some members measuring in at 6'8" and 6'9"."



HARRY FOLEY ... Rams' Mentor

While talking about the team Coach Foley said, "The players are full-time students and can be enrolled in any program at the college." Recruiting players is no problem because Southeastern has had a basketball program since it's inception. The Rams have a good reputation, which is the best means of bringing in new talent. Another method is of recruitment is "word of mouth" by the players. Foley added, "I travel some to local high schools and over the state, as well as South Carolina, looking for talent." Last year the Rams were in the Region X play-off, which included North Carolina, South Carolina, and Virginia Junior Colleges.

When asked if he has students from distant areas, Foley stated, "At this time the Rams count among its members two young men from St. Thomas, The Virgin Islands. An article in their local newspaper was seen by a recreational director there who helped make arrangements for the two to attend Southeastern Community College."

Upon leaving Southeastern, many of the basketball players receive scholarships

Three young men who graduated from Southeastern last year are now continuing their studies and basketball careers at four-year schools. Wallace Moore of Winchester, Kentucky, now attends Coppin State University in Baltimore, Maryland; Merele Britt of Lumberton, attends the University of South Carolina at Coastal of Conway, South Carolina; and Robert Mills of Rowland attends Mercer University of Georgia.

Coach Foley is a member of the faculty at Southeastern Community College. He has also taught English and Social Studies in West Memphis, Arkansas, and at Acme-Delco High School. He said, "I never played basketball; I just kind of backed into it. In the beginning I helped out when I was a student at Southeastern by keeping score and just became more and more involved in basketball. I went from being a fan to scorekeeper to assistant to coach." Foley stressed, "I volunteered to coach." He really enjoys being a coach and working with young people.

SOUTHEASTERN

In his second year as head coach of the Rams, Harry Foley has five returning players (3 starters), but lost his main man from last year's 18-7 squad. Coach Foley lists finding a replacement for team and conference MVP Robert Miles as his largest problem. Perhaps Nolan Pearsall (6'6" C) will be able to fill some of the void created by Miles' departure. The Rams appear to be set at guard with Al Cromartie (7 ppg) and Clarence Ganus (18.8 ppg), both starters from last year's team. At one forward Louis Simeon, 6'5", averaged 12 ppg and 12 rebounds is another starter from last year. Southeastern will not be as big as in past years, but Coach Foley expects his team will be quicker. Unless injuries cripple key players, Foley believes his team will be a contenders at the end of the season.

LOUISBURG — The Rams of Southeastern Community College dropped their second Eastern Tarheel Junior College Conference basketball decision of the week here, Thursday night, bowing to the Louisburg Hurricanes, 83-78.

This loss, combined with a 109-106 double-overtime defeat at the home of the hands of loop-leader Chowan College last Monday, dropped the Rams' ETJCC record to 2-4, and made them 8-7 for the year.

Southeastern is at home tonight (Monday) in the Whiteville High School gym with Methodist College's JVs at 8 p.m. The game will be the nightcap of a twin-bill that will also see the Lady Rams of Coach Susan Harmuth playing Durham College's women in a 6 p.m. contest. The Lady Rams' scheduled game at Durham College the past Saturday night was postponed until Thursday night, Feb. 2 at 6 p.m.

College Will Provide Training For Workers At Fair Bluff

Southeastern Community College will be able to offer training for employees of the new Croft Metals Inc. plant at Fair Bluff, although state appropriations for industrial training are depleted.

Southeastern President Dr. Ron McCarter said in a interview this week that if funds are not forthcoming from the Department of Community Colleges, he will draw funds from the college's extension budget to carry a training program until the start of the new fiscal year.

The Department of Community Colleges announced this month that the $728,000 appropriated by the General Assembly to supply training for new and expanded industries across the state was nearly gone as of Jan. 1. During the first six months of the fiscal year, which began last July 1, the state's technical institutes and community colleges trained nearly 4,500 employees for 51 new or expanding industries and had spent $723,485 to do it. NR 2-9-78

Dr. McCarter said the college would have to request funds from the state department, "and I don't know what we're going to be told. Croft Metals may not need much in the way of heavy training until the start of the new fiscal year and we'll be better funded then."

He added that the school "will stand by and provide as much training as we can out of our extension budget."

McCarter said community college funding had been poor during the past three years and believes allocations from the General Assembly will improve for fiscal 1978-79.

Col. Rudolph Walters, director of the Columbus County Economic Development Commission, had agreed to provide training for Croft's employees as an inducement for the company to move to Columbus.

Croft Metals agreed last month to purchase New Farmer's Warehouse and begin operations immediately. Some personnel already have been hired. The firm, which is based in McComb, Miss., will manufacture aluminum windows. It plans to hire 125 persons initially and have about 350 persons working after 18 months. The company also has a plant at Lumber Bridge, N.C., which employs 800 persons.

Southeastern's Rams Baseball Has Talent And Tough Schedule

By JIGGS POWERS

Six lettermen are among the 16 men on the 1978 Southeastern Community College Rams' baseball squad which opens its schedule here today (Thursday) at 1 p.m. in a doubleheader with the Wingate College nine.

Coach Bob Young has some very promising prospects for future baseball action among his membership in the Rams Club, but he also has two things facing him ... and them ... a lack of depth in talented performers at every post and a tough, real tough schedule.

If weather and circumstances permit, the Rams of SCC will play 36 games by April 23. All will be in the form of doubleheaders, 18 playing dates.

Baldwin is a former Whiteville High School and Post 137 American Legion standout, while Barefoot formerly played with Hallsboro High; Rozier is from Fayetteville and was prominent in prep action there; while Michael Hobbs is a former Hallsboro member and has been listed in the major league draft. Smith, like Baldwin, is formerly of the Whiteville High School Wolfpack.

Newcomers to the Rams' ranks include Pitches Beaver Oxendine, 180-pound freshman fireballer from Fairgrove High School, also on the list of major league scouts; Andy Robinson, 180 freshman, who formerly hurled for West Columbus' Vikings and is one of the first North Carolina Dixie Youth Baseball Scholarship winners.

Bobby Hoffman, former Hallsboro High School catcher and the ace receiver of the Whiteville Post 137 Legion team the past two summers, will be the Rams' mainstay behind the plate. He is a 170-pound freshman. Leading the way at third-base is another former Hallsboro Tiger, Jerry Bullard, 185 sophomore transfer from Pembroke State University; While Ronnie Faison, the Locker Room Scholarship winner from Wake Forest is the top man at the shortstop spot. He will also pitch some, according to Young.

The 36-game doubleheader schedule will be featured by a four-game doubleheader (8 games) offering with the University of North Carolina at Wilmington JVs and eight Eastern Tarheel Junior College Athletic Conference twin-bills.

All twin-bills begin at 1 p.m. unless marked in the following schedule, in which official Eastern Tar Heel JCAC games marked+:

Rams Golfers Plan To Open Season, Tuesday

By DAN BISER

The Southeastern Community College golf team will open its 1978 spring schedule next Tuesday when it will host Lenoir Community College at Pinelands Golf Course in Nichols, S.C.

All of the Rams' home matches will played at Pinelands which is located 29 miles from the SCC campus. Pinelands is a par 72, 7,000 yard course.

Tuesday's match with Lenoir will count in the new Eastern Tar Heel Athletic Conference standings, according to Ram coach Barry Nation. The ETHAC also includes Mt. Olive, Louisburg and Chowan, Non-conference foes include Ferrum College of Virginia, Spartanburg Methodist of South Carolina, Wingate and Brevard.

Nation heads into the season with a relatively young club, but stated that he feels that it has good potential.

Nation lost several key members from his 1977 squad, including Phil McRae who was medalist in both the 1976 and 1977 North Carolina Community College Athletic Association tournaments.

The only two returnees from last year's NCCCAA championship squad are Neal Carter, a graduate of West Columbus High School, and Joey Gore, a Whiteville High product. Nation reported that these two should provide consistency and leadership this spring.

"I'm really pleased with Neal's progress," Nation said. "He was somewhat erratic last year, but he seems to have settled down and has gotten his game together. Joey can usually be counted on to come in the low 80's at Pinelands."

Heading the list of freshmen on this year's squad are John Swinson, a mainstay on the stellar Wilmington Hoggard golf team last spring and Thomas Gunn of Mullins, S.C.

"Both John and Thomas have a lot of talent and a lot of dedication to the game," Nation said. "John did real well in the two tournaments we played in the fall. This will be the first quarter for Thomas at Southeastern but he has kept up with his game and he should be a big help."

Other freshmen include Donald Sneeden, a star last year for Cape Fear Academy of Wilmington; Demet Bordeaux, a former Wilmington New Hanover linkster; and Jeff Chamberlin, a two-year letterman at Whiteville High.

SCC Foundation Offers Dinner-Theatre

NR 3-13-78

A comedy by Neil Simon, America's most acclaimed writer of stage comedies, is coming to Whiteville on Saturday, April 1. It is "The Star-Spangled Girl," produced by the Repertory Theatre of America and starring the nationally known Alpha-Omega Players from Texas. It is being presented locally by the Southeastern Community College Foundation.

J. Herman Leder, honorary chairman, said "The 'Star-Spangled Girl' is a comedy that spins its fun out of the presentday tendencies from bright young men to dedicate themselves to dissenting from old established American traditions. John Westbrook and Norman Cornall (Andy and Norman) will portray a pair living in poverty in San Francisco in order to publish a magazine devoted to social protest.

"Their frantic efforts to keep their magazine going are hilariously complicated by the intrusion of Sophie Rauschmeyer, a cute cornpone Southern girl played by Cynthia Coleman. She is a former member of the U.S. Olympic Swimming Team, who is so thoroughly American that she is schandalized by their irrelevance for her patriotic ideals.

"Norman falls so helplessly in love with her that he is unable to write any more heretical articles under his various pseudonyms. Andy's efforts to extract him from his mooning state lead to his own dramatic entrapment, as hilarious complications ensue."

"The Star-Spangled Girl" was one of Broadway's biggest comedy hits of the 1966-67 season, when it drew thronging audiences for an eight-month run.

The production will be in Whiteville for one night only, Saturday, April 1. Sponsored by Southeastern Community College Foundation, the dinner theatre begins at 6:30 p.m. at Southeastern Community College. For reservations, call Jack Ervin at 642-7141, Ext. 42.

THE SCC FOUNDATION will again offer a dinner-theatre as a money-raising event to benefit Southeastern Community College. This year's show will be Saturday, April 1, and the Alpha-Omega Players of Texas will perform Neil Simon's comedy "Star Spangled Girl." The Alpha-Omega Players are pictured during a rehearsal of the show.

Rams Beat Alleganey In Openers

By JIGS POWERS

Coach Bob Young's Southeastern Community College Rams finally pried the lid off their 1978 baseball season at their Rams Park yesterday (Wednesday) afternoon, decisioning Alleganey Community College from Cumberland, Md., 12-4 and 6-4, in a junior college doubleheader.

TODAY, SATURDAY

The Rams had seen their first three doubleheaders go down the drain due to bad weather, including one with the University of North Carolina - Wilmington JVs, which has been re-scheduled here at 2 p.m. this afternoon (Thursday).

Louisburg is due to play the Rams here in an official Eastern Tarheel Conference twin-bill starting at 1 p.m., Saturday and then the Rams travel to Lenoir Community College, Kinston, for a pair of games on Tuesday at 1 p.m.

Young's boys slugged out 12 hits in the opening game, with Mike Hobbs, Jerry Bullard, and Alan Barefoot, all former Hallsboro High School Tigers, leading the way along with former Whiteville Wolfpacker Seth Smith. Smith hit 3 for 4, two of them triples and he had a pair of RBIs; Hobbs had 2 for 3, both doubles and an RBI; Bullard had a two-run base-hit; Barefoot hit 2 for 4 with a double and Bobby Hoffman, Rams catcher and former Hallsboro receiver, hit a run-scoring double.

Gary "Beaver" Oxendine, former Fairgrove righthander, held the vistors from Maryland to 6 hits, gave up 3 hits and one earned run in going the first 5 innings before giving away to former West Columbus star Andy Robinson. Oxendine was the winner.

Library's 'Getting Tough' Works

By THOM H. BILLINGTON

The eyes of library officials in North Carolina are focused on Columbus County, watching to see how the county library system's "get tough" policy with overdue book patrons is working.

So far, the policy is a resounding success.

Letters went out last December to 341 patrons who were holding $9,765.15 worth of books overdue more than 90 days. This list included only those with four or more books. The letters warned that unless the books were returned or paid for within 15 days, court action would be taken.

In January, suit was begun against six persons from a list of long overdue patrons selected at random. "Three of the patrons have completely cleared up the charges, two are in the process of doing so and one did not respond," said Library Director Amanda Bible this week.

The person who did not respond or appear in court will have a judgement filed against her, added Mrs. Bible. Filing of a judgement will allow the county sheriff to levy against property to satisfy the library's claim. It will also make obtaining credit difficult for the respondent.

The effect of the "get tough" policy has reduced the number of overdue patrons by 33 per cent Mrs. Bible added, and the number of overdue books has been reduced by 38 per cent.

Action on taking indifferent patrons to court will continue. "We selected 16 persons originally," Mrs. Bible pointed out. "We are going to go to court against the remaining 10 persons next."

The policy has not affected library circulation. In fact, it s rising astronomically. "Our circulation is 1,600 books more than at the same time last year," she pointed out "and that is with the Bookmobile out of service and does not include circulation at the Whiteville Library."

It has been beneficial to other libraries, too. "Southeastern Community College called and told me they have been getting a lot of overdue books back. They feel this is a result of our campaign. And Whiteville Library had the same experience. "They said they're getting books back they haven't seen in five or six years."

Reaction over the state has been something like awe. "They tell me, 'I admire the guts you have, but we couldn't do this in our town, the people wouldn't stand for it," Mrs. Bible said "We have visited some of these libraries and they are completely bogged down in paperwork on overdue books."

Mrs. Bible also credits publicity for the effectiveness of the campaign. Shortly after The News Reporter announced the new, tougher policy, overdue books began appearing overnight in the book drop at the main library building on the Chadbourn Hwy.

Car Dealership Adds Salesman

NR 3-16-78

Pat Wooten, a native and lifelong resident of Whiteville, has recently been employed by G & C Motor Co. of Whiteville as a salesman.

The 25-year-old Wooten has been a car salesman in the county for the past five years, during which time he won several sales awards.

Wooten, a graduate of Whiteville High School, attended Southeastern Community College. He is married to the former Rhonda Watts of Tabor City. The Wootens live on West Williamson Street in Whiteville.

Speaking of the newest member of their sales staff, Dick Coburn of G & C said, "We are very pleased to have Pat with us. He is a hard-working young man with a good reputation in the community."

Rams' Golfers Given Forfeit Over Lenoir

NR 3-16-78

NICHOLS, S.C. — Coach Barry Nation's Southeastern Community College golfers posted a forfeit win, Tuesday, when its opponent, Lenoir Community College of Kinston, N.C. failed to field a team.

Nation said that Lenoir's team was beset by academic problems and other causes resulting in the loss of some players, causing the forfeit.

"I feel we would have beaten them, anyway" said the Rams' coach, "if we had played. The team (his Rams) played inter-team matches at Pinelands Country Club here (at Nichols) and we shot real good rounds. All of the men playing looked improved over their last outings. I feel real hopeful about our chances this year."

He said SCC would also receive another forfeit from Lenoir on April 4, when Southeastern is due to play Lenoir at Kinston. The next meet for the Rams is Tuesday, March 21 when Mount Olive Junior College comes to Pinelands CC for a dual battle at 2 p.m.

Nation said he knew how it was to have some players he had depended upon come up mising; since he has lost John Swinson, highly-respected recruit from Hoggard High's team of last year, who is ineligible for action this spring; also Jeff Chamberlin, former Whiteville High School Wolfpack golfer, who is also no longer on the team, said Nation. Both were freshmen and had been depended upon to help in bettering last year's Rams' team, which was the North Carolina Community College Athletic Conference champion.

This leaves him, however, with men like Neal Carter from West Columbus and Joey Gore of Whiteville, the only returnees; Thomas Gunn, of Mullins, a top recruit; Donald Sneeden, another prize recruit who comes from the Cape Fear Academy team of Wilmington; Demet Bordeaux, former New Hanover (Wilmington) golfer; to form the nucleus of the team to carry on for Southeastern on the links. — (JIGGS POWERS).

College Cosmetology Program Expands

NR 3-16-78

The Cosmetology Department of Southeastern Community College offers basic hair care instruction and much more. Students enrolled in cosmetology receive instruction in all areas of cosmetology. The one-year program covers shampoo and set, hair cuts, permanents, coloring, manicures, facials and academic courses as well.

The first two hours each day are devoted to academic study. Wednesdays are spent giving demonstrations in various areas of cosmetology to students.

Cosmetology instructors are Audra Smith and Betty Jo Walters. Ms. Smith is from Ft. Bragg and Ms. Walters is from Fairmont. They met for the first time in the fall of 1975, when they began working at Southeastern. Upon meeting the two discovered they shared many similarities. They are the same age, both started in cosmetology in 1965. Both came to SCC at the same time.

As instructors they have many thoughts on future plans for improving their department. So far their most far-reaching contribution has been to offer a 1,500 hour program of cosmetology. Originally a student received 1,200 hours of instruction, and upon graduation was required to work a six-month apprenticeship with a licensed hairdresser before obtaining a license. However, with the added 300 hours the entire process can be completed on campus. This became effective in July, 1977.

Audra and Betty Jo said they feel Southeastern definitely offers many advantages to its students because of the inclusion of the academic classes and the scientific approach to training.

High on the list of priorities are the regularly scheduled visits to four local rest homes. During these visits students of the Cosmetology program offer their skills and services to the residents.

The cosmetology program is open to males as well as females. Also, hair care services are available to both men and women.

Southeastern Defeats Wilmington JVs In 10

By JIGGS POWERS

Despite a good hitting show by former Hallsboro Tiger and Whiteville American Legion Post 137 Infielder Russell Tyler, Coach Bob Young's Southeastern Community College Rams posted their third straight baseball win of the season here, Thursday afternoon, beating the University of North Carolina at Wilmington junior varsity, 10-9, in a 10-inning game.

Tyler, now a member of the UNC-W JVs, is from Lake Waccamaw. He had almost half his team's hits off three Rams pitchers, belting out 4 for 6, including a 3-run homer that tied the score for the Port City collegians in the 9th inning and sent the game into the extra frame. Ronnie Faison, from Wake Forest-Rolesville, was the winning Rams' pitcher.

R. Warren hit 2 for 4, both doubles, for UNC-W, also.

For the 3-0 Rams, Catcher Bobby Hoffman, a mate of Tyler's on the Post 137 American Legion team the past two summers, hit 3 for 4 to pace the winners; while Michael Hobbs had 2 for 5, with a triple and Allan Barefoot hit 2 for 4. Hobbs and Barefoot, like Hoffman and Tyler, are all former Hallsboro Tiger stars. Bobby Rozier, a former Fayetteville Southview High star, hit 2 for 6 for the Southeastern crew.

Southeastern hosts Lenoir Community College here, Monday (today) at 1 p. m. in a conference doubleheader. It will be the first Eastern Tarheel Conference games for Coach Young's outfit.

Southeastern Has Great Day Beating Hurricanes

By JIGGS POWERS

NICHOLS, S.C. — Coach Barry Nation's Southeastern Community College Rams golf team prepped for a two-day weekend road trip into the central and northeastern North Carolina areas by winning a satisfying, 316-324 triumph over Louisburg Junior College's Hurricane golfers here, Monday.

Two Rams — Thomas Gunn of Mullins and Donald Sneeden of Wilmington, N.C., were co-medalists for the match with 74s, while John Daniels led the Hurricane contingent with a 78, followed by mate Steve Loftis with 79.

Other low-scoring Rams was Demette Bordeaux of Wilmington, 82; Joey Gore of Whiteville, 86; Neil Carter, Chadbourn, 89 and Jeff Chamberlin, Whiteville, 92. Other Louisburg tallies follow: Kevin Guyette, 83; Chip McIntyre 84; and also, Bobby Johnson, 90 and Billy Freeman, 91.

"It sure pleased my heart to see those two 74s and two of our men tying for medalist honors", said Nation of the combined feat of Gunn and Sneeden against the Hurricanes. "And, that round of 316 was the lowest we've shot at Pineland as a team since we began playing there two years ago."

Southeastern raised its record to 6-1 and is now 3-1 within the Eastern Tarheel Junior College Conference. Louisburg is 1-4 within the league.

The Rams now travel to the Wake Forest Country Club today (Thursday) to face the Louisburg 'Canes and the Ferrum, Va. Junior College linksmen in a tri-match. They'll stay overnight and move on to Murfreesboro to face Chowan and Ferrum (again) in further conference action on Friday.

The Faces Of Mike Cross In Concert

For 100 minutes, straight through, except for 30 seconds when he went backstage to signify the end of the program, Mike Cross kept a near capacity audience clapping hands and stomping feet to his kind of music in the Southeastern Community College auditorium. NR 4-20-78

There were young and old people in the audience, and while there were more young than old, both groups were asking for more near the end of the program. At the start most of the cheers and clapping came from the young, but it didn't take long for the older folk to catch on to the rhythm and join the younger ones in appreciation for an artist who has gone from performing in a few local night spots in Chapel Hill to being a well-known performer in the South and Midwest.

Cross played both the guitar and fiddle, but it was his fiddlin' which was most appreciated that particular Wednesday night. He played a mixture of Blue Grass, mountain tunes, Irish jigs and reels, and some of his own folk and country songs.

His fast-paced program included stories which led into his songs, and at times it appeared he enjoyed telling the stories more than singing the songs.

Cross humorously said that he felt he was born to be an old man -- "Not senile, just old." If the non-stop performer doesn't slow down his performance he might get old before his time, but he sure can make an audience young again.

Nixon, Rams Golfers Among Tops In ETJCC

By JIGGS POWERS

WHITEVILLE — Ottis Nixon of the Louisburg Hurricanes and Southeastern Community College's golf team are the lone local area personalities and groups who are among the leaders, or were when Eastern Tarheel Junior College Conference Sports Information Director Barry Nation released his latest report, on stats reported to him through April 27.

Nixon, a former West Columbus High School sports star, plays third-base for the Louisburg nine and Nation's stats show him with a .324 batting average, compiled by getting 38 hits in 117 trips in 36 games. This gives him the seventh top hitting average in the Eastern loop. He has hit 9 home runs, runner-up to his first-base teammate, Barclift, who leads the league with a dozen round-trippers.

Nixon is also runner-up in RBIs, have sent 34 across the plate. Barclift, too, leads in this department with 43 RBIs. Nixon also has 6 doubles, Barclift 8.

Nation's Southeastern Rams Golf team is runner-up in the conference race to Mount Olive's 7-0 outfit, according to the April 27 stas. SCC had won 6, lost 2 at the time.

In tennis, the lone report showed Chowan 8, Louisburg 1; Chowan 7, Louisburg 2.

It's not hard to figure why Louisburg is leading the conference in baseball, the Hurricanes have three of the top hitters in the loop and own 'the top three" pitchers; in Holton (8-0), Foster (4-0) and Bradley (7-1). Bradley's ERA is 0.81; Foster's is 0.66 and Holton's is 0.86.

Barclift is batting .495 besides leading in practically all other departments and Twig Little, the 'Cane Shortstop, is hitting .348; Nixon has a .324 mark.

Golf results listed showed Louisburg winning at Ground Hog Mountain with 334 to Ferrum's 335 and Wingate's 351; at Wake Forest, Chowan (321) over Louisubrg (323); also at Wake Forest, Southeastern clipping Ferrum and Louisburg, 324 to 336 and 337; at Beechwood, Southeastern (313) beating Chowan (325) and Ferrum (336); and, finally, at Pineland, Spartanburg Methodist remaining unbeaten (11-0) by downing Southeastern and Chowan, 299 to 316 and 330.

WCHS Future Farmers Advance To State Competition

NR 6-5-78

The West Columbus High School Future Farmers of America (FFA) chapter advanced to state competition after capturing honors in several areas in District IV competition at Southeastern Community College recently.

If successful on the state level, the chapter will enter into national competition where it has received the Gold Emblem award, the highest an FFA chapter can earn, for the past five years. The maximum number of winners of this award in North Carolina has been two, according to John R. Faulk, FFA adviser. He noted also that some states do not receive any national honors.

FFA chapters throughout the nation are judged on district, state and national levels in the areas of public relations, participation in state and national activities, community service, cooperation, leadership, earnings and savings.

"We had total involvement by all members this year," Faulk said. "We did well in face-to-face competition and in other areas," he added, alluding to numerous awards in livestock, dairy, horticulture and soil judging. The chapter has also had such creditable projects as banquets, radio and television programs and many other community service projects.

Meanwhile, Faulk said, "One phase of FFA involvement that we have wanted to become a part of but have not done so is international activities. We are working on this area, however, and soon we hope to be able to send some FFA members abroad as exchange students."

Teachers Study Reading

NR 8-10-78

Southeastern Community College campus was host the week of July 31 to August 4 for educators from the Whiteville City School and Bladen County School Systems.

The adult Education division of Southeastern Community College hosted over 100 participants representing 43 classes from the two school units. The institute was conducted by Mrs. Shirley Owen and Mrs. Annie Evans, reading consultants with the Department of Public Instruction in Region 4. Region 4 consists of 11 counties and 18 administrative units.

The major thrust of the institute was developing a team approach to teaching reading. A comprehensive reading plan was written by the K-3 participants in each school represented. Goals and objectives for the 1978-79 school year were established with a concentration in the components of the state reading program:

(1) Aides to reinforce reading and assist the classroom teacher.

(2) Volunteers selected and trained to listen to or read to children.

(3) Supplementary materials and techniques to teach reading.

(4) Evaluation procedures to assess pupil progress.

Topics discussed in the institute were readiness skills, storytelling, language experience, techniques with media, creative writing, learning centers, children's literature, creating an environment, bookmaking, realistic reading, and roles of the aides, principals, teachers, and support personnel.

The feedback from the teachers, aides, principals and supervisors was positive with the participants having gained ideas to use in the classroom.

Adams Leaves Police Force

NR

John D. Adams, an officer with Whiteville Police Department for the past eight years, completed his final day as a police officer Friday.

Adams resigned two weeks ago and went to work for the Woods Family Store chain this morning.

"My work as a police officer has been a pleasurable experience," Adams said, "but I had a good job offer that I feel will be beneficial to my family's future. I want to thank the people of Whiteville and the surrounding area for their assistance and cooperation while I was an officer. Without the community's help, an officer's job would be impossible. An officer can only be as good as the people want him to be and will allow him to be through their cooperation in trying to control crime. I think very highly of the people of Whiteville and I will miss the day to day contact with them."

Adams joined Whiteville Police Department in an unofficial capacity before he became an officer. He was meter officer for about eight months before he became a patrolman in June, 1970. He was promoted to line sergeant in charge of maintenance and operations of vehicles and inventory of equipment in 1973 and became crime prevention officer earlier this year.

Adams is a Columbus County native, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Taylor Adams of Rt. 2, Clarkton. He is married to the former Jean Gaskins of Tabor City and he is currently enrolled in the criminal justice program at Southeastern Community College.

College Admission Case Goes To Supreme Court

NR 8-10-78

By WRAY THOMPSON

A Columbus County case may find its way to the nation's highest court if it approves a petition that will be submitted within the next 30 days by the defendant, Southeastern Community College.

The case had its beginning after Ms. Frances Davis of Fairmont was denied admission to the college's associate degree nursing program in 1975-76. At that time the college had approximately 100 applicants, but there were only 40 positions open.

Denial of Ms. Davis in the nursing program was because of a hearing impediment.

Ms. Davis had qualified for Licensed Practical Nurse certification from Robeson Technical Institute, and had taken college parallel courses at Southeastern.

She filed a suit in Federal District Court for the Eastern District of North Carolina, Fayetteville District, charging that she had been deprived of her constitutional rights, and in particular under the 14th amendment that assure equal protection under the law and due process.

With Judge Robert Hemphell presiding, the defense asserted that it was not a federal matter because the college's administrative procedures were applied uniformly, and the matter of a college education is a privilege rather than a constitutional right.

The college further stated that the plantiff's hearing impairment is so severe as to make her unable to participate in the clinical portion of the program and to engage in a safe nursing practice.

Ms. Davis' denial of admission was due to her hearing impediment at the time of application, as evaluated by the college administration, and confirmed by reports of audiology examinations at Duke. Further, according to the defense, because of the evaluation reports, the N.C. Board of Nursing cited an opinion that she would be unable to function in the nursing program.

The plaintiff did not testify during the federal district court trial. The only evidence entered were reports and records by the plaintiff's and defendant's attorneys by stipulation.

Judge Hemphell, in making his findings a fact and conclusions of law in the Fayetteville trial, decided that the admission to a state community college is a privilege and not by itself a constitutional or property right, subject to the rules and regulations for admission are not arbitrary or unreasonable.

The judge further concluded that the college had not discriminated Ms. Davis in denying her admission to the nursing program because the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, reasonably construed, allows admission to be prohibited in a federally-assisted program if a person's handicap renders himself or herself to be unable to effectively participate in the activity.

Judge Hemphell said, based on the evidence, Ms. Davis' handicap would keep her from safely performing in the program, and denied her the relief she sought.

The case was then appealed by Ms. Davis to the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals in Richmond, with arguments made before the court on Jan. 9, 1978. The appeals court handed down its decision that did not deal with any of the constitutional questions that had arisen, but determined that Judge Hemphell erred in his findings. Under the law, the appelate judges concluded, a person could not be denied admission by reason of physical handicap alone, and also that a private right of action does apply under the Rehabilitation Act.

The college then filed a petition for a rehearing before the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals, and was joined in the action by the commonwealths of Kentucky, Pennsylvania and Virginia; and the states of Connecticut, Delaware, Maryland, Mississippi, Missouri, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee and West Virginia, each of which filed briefs in support of the rehearing. By a split decision of the court on June 29, 1978, the petition for a rehearing was denied.

Attorney Williamson said he is planning to petition the U.S. Supreme Court to review the case, and will have the continued support of the commonwealths and states that petitioned for the rehearing.

In the meantime, Ms. Davis, who was orginally represented by Phillip Diehl of Raeford, has acquired the support and legal counsel availed by the National Center for the Law, the Deaf Legal Defense Fund, the Disabilities Rights Center, and Attorney James Cherry.

Williamson said the case has attracted nationwide attention because it is the first one to test the law. "It's timely, novel, and has great national significance," he said.

NR 9-7-78

The administration of Southeastern Community College anticipates a fall registration about equal to that of the same quarter last year.

As of yesterday (Wednesday) afternoon, 1,400 students had registered. Dr. Dan Moore, dean of Student Development, said, "We usually have an additional 300 to 400 students who complete registration by the end of the late registration period." Southeastern enrolled 1,883 for the 1977 fall semester.

The late registration will end next Wednesday, Dr. Moore announced.

Bill Wilson, dean of Adult Education, who is handling registration for the non-curricular division, expects an enrollment of 1,800 students through next week.

Said Dr. Moore, "Last Thursday evening we had 186 students to register. This was the largest group we have had to register in one night."

Dr. Richard Paulsen, academic dean, stated, "Many adults in the community are taking one or more courses. They have found it very simple just to come to the campus and sign up for the course. Too, many of them are taking a course that they have always wanted to take, or are just exploring the possibility of furthering their education."

Classes began today. Tonight will be busy for the instructors in the evening programs, for more than half of their enrollment is expected to wait to enroll until their first class.

The college is striving to satisfy new needs by offering new courses, Dr. Ron McCarter, president, explained. One example of a first-time-ever class offering is one that is geared to prepare reading teacher aides to coincide with Gov. Jim Hunts program that was legislated last year and which will be implemented more fully during each passing year.

A course that had its tryouts during the summer and proved to be highly successful is on automobile body repair. It will be repeated this fall — by popular demand.

As the community college concept was to open the doors of education to all ages, the variety of courses run the gamut. There is even a comparatively new one that deals with vocational pottery, Dr. McCarter revealed.

He and other community college administrators are keeping in mind their knowledge that the traditional college-age enrollment is diminishing, and the prediction is that it will fall by 20 percent by 1980. "So we're supplementing the regular college and special interest courses with others that will attract such people as homemakers and senior citizens to keep our enrollment up," the president said.

SCC To Light Tennis Courts

NR 9-28-78

Approval has been given by the Board of Trustees of Southeastern Community College to light the six college tennis courts. At the regular meeting on Thursday evening, President W. Ronald McCarter informed the Board that the project could be completed for approximately $2,000 in materials and using college employee labor, including CETA workers.

"Revenue from the coin boxes used to operate these lights will pay for the electric power as well as general maintenance on the courts. As usual, classes and other scheduled activity will have priority use, after which the public is welcome," he said.

The board also approved the installation of a water line to the new fire service training ground. The fire service training ground will enable SCC to offer better training services to firemen in the service area. There is not a similar training ground within a 60-mile radius. Funds for both the lighting project and the water line project are available from funds left over from recent campus improvement projects.

In other business of the board, the Dean for Student Development, Dr. Dan Moore, announced that the fall credit students to date number 1798. The non-credit, extension students number 1377 to date. More students in both categories are expected inasmuch as special classes will still be set up. This enrollment is approximately the same as last year; Dean Moore, reported the average number of credit hours carried by students this year, including part-time students, is higher than last year, which indicates that the full-time equivalency will be considerably higher than last fall quarter.

The board approved personnel contracts for the 1978-79 college year and the state budget for the year. "Though there are many important financial needs still not addressed by the State Board of Education, the current budget is, nevertheless, considerably better than the budget of the last three years, inasmuch as more funds are available for part-time adult education and for instructional service positions," reported Dr. McCarter.

Another brother Clarence is an alcoholics counselor with Southeastern Mental Health and is involved with law enforcement and the courts in that capacity.

"Police work 'kind of rubbed off on me and I always knew I wanted to come to the Whiteville department," Ptm. Williams said.

After graduating from West Columbus High School, Ptm. Williams joined the U.S. Army and was stationed at Fort Bragg and in Germany working security.

While employed by the Department of Corrections, he worked for a year at the Brunswick Prison Unit and at the Bladen County Unit at White Lake for four months.

Foundation Sets $40,000 Goal

NR 11-16-78

The Southeastern Community College Foundation Board of Directors met at the Wildlife Club in Tabor City and established a goal of $40,000 for the Foundation's Annual Giving Program this year.

Dr. F.M. Carroll, president of the foundation, stated that "local funds raised by the foundation are used to match with federal funds to provide financial assistance to needy but worthy students of the college. Each dollar raised by the Foundation results in $6 to $9 in additional funds from the federal government. A $100 contribution can result in $900 of funds to help worthy students remain in school."

Dr. Carroll stated that "the work of the SCC Foundation can be viewed as an additional industry in the county. This is because the $500,000 to $1 million in financial assistance made possible by the Foundation is spent by the students in our communities. The students use these funds to buy gas, food, clothing, supplies and lodging. The impact on our economy is the same as the payroll of many of our small industries."

Sonny Sanders, campaign chairman, stated, "Members of the Foundation Board will be contacting businesses and individuals between now and Dec. 15 to receive their tax-deductible gifts. The students at the college are the most important permanent assets we have. When you are asked to contribute, remember you are making your money work in our community by investing in our youth."

N4CSGA Meeting Held

NR 11-16-78

The theme for the fall convention was 25 sessions of unity and involvement. Students formed committees and attended workshops to better themselves and their abilities in serving their schools and communities.

Special guest speakers were Senator Jesse Helms and Insurance Commissioner John Ingram, both of whom were campaigning for the United States Senate in the recent elections.

There were 300 delegates present from across the state and they said that despite the large delegation, friends were made and the new ideas and plans were discussed.

Moore Elected State President Of Association

NR 11-20-78

Dr. Moore began his year as president at a meeting of the Association held in Raleigh in late October.

The State Student Personnel Association is comprised of over 450 deans, counselors, registrars, financial aid officers, placement officers, and admissions officers from 57 higher education institutions. As a total body and through its five divisions, the association provides a forum for an exchange of ideas, information and professional development for community college and technical institute personnel.

Dr. Moore has been at Southeastern since June 1974. He and his family live in Chadbourn.

He has been employed at two other North Carolina community colleges as well as Appalachian State University and Marshall University.

College May Lose $500,000

If Local Funds Are Delayed

NR 11-20-78

The Board of Trustees of Southeastern Community College has commissioned Ballard, McKim, and Sawyer, Inc., of Wilmington, to begin schematic planning for a new library building on campus.

During the regular meeting on Thursday, the Southeastern Community College board heard Dr. W. Ronald McCarter, president, and Robert Sawyer, architect, describe the need for more precise planning documents in order to describe fully to the county commissioners and other potential funding sources exactly what the building will be like and what it should cost.

"Our county commisioners have expressed a genuine desire to help us construct this badly-needed addition to our campus. We need to keep them updated constantly on the project and its potential cost. The longer we wait, of course, the more it's going to cost; and the more chance we have for losing the $500,000 from the state."

In July, the State Board of Education allocated $500,000 for this library project. "We have only 18 months to certify that we will match that $500,000 with local funds," explained Dr. McCarter, "or it reverts to the state. Even a minimum building, however, is going to cost more than $1 million, which means that local funds will need to exceed $500,000. If we build 40,000 square feet as projected, the cost will be $1 million."

In other business of the board, Chairman Sam Koonce announced the completion of the waste water line, tennis court lights, and a land trade with Arthur Williamson, a long-time college benefactor, for timber rights on campus.

Dr. Dan announced 1850 credit and over 2,000 non-credit students enrolled at SCC this fall quarter.

Dr. McCarter presented the Annual Report of the college for the 1977-78 year and highlighted achievements for the year. "One of our most remarkable achievements last year was a square footage growth of 26 per cent but only a 4.4 per cent increase in kilowatt hours. The college heats and cools with electricity, but we have implemented dozens of fuel cost-savings measures which have kept cost to a minimum," reported Dr. McCarter.

Nurse Assistant Program Set At SCC

NR 11-20-78

The Nurse Assistant program is designed to meet the increasing need for trained personnel to provide basic nursing care for patients. Working under the supervision of a licensed nurse, the nurses' assistant is an unlicensed health care worker who can perform a number of routine tasks that allow the licensed nurse to devote more time to specialized nursing care.

Through employment of well-trained nurses' assistants, many hospitals and nursing homes are able to provide effective patient care in spite of often critical shortages of licensed nurses.

The Nurse Assistant program is a credit program which is open to high school graduates. Courses are offered over a two-quarter period for a total of 242 hours of instruction.

First quarter courses cover reading skills, a brief history of nursing care, medical terminology, and an introduction to basic nursing care.

In the second quarter, the student receives continued instruction in medical terminology and more in-depth training in basic nursing skills including a minimum of 40 hours of clinical training in a hospital or nursing care facility. Some of the nursing skill topics covered in the program include maintaining sanitary conditions, hospital bed preparation, bathing and feeding the patient, measuring and recording vital signs, and care of patient before and after surgery.

Individuals who may be interested in this program should contact Mr. Leon Fox, Dean of Occupational Education, at 642-7141. Registration for winter quarter classes will be held on Tuesday, Nov. 28 with classes scheduled to begin the following day.

Crime Prevention Course Completed

NR 11-23-78

Three law enforcement officers of Columbus County completed a 12-hour course at Southeastern Community College in crime prevention. The three-day course was sponsored by the Department of Crime Control and Public Safety.

Ptm. John Paul Lennon of the Columbus County Police Department, the crime prevention coordinator for his agency, participated, as were Ptm. Donald M. Hardwick and Ptm. Steven A. Gunsallus of Whiteville Police Department.

Designed to provide law enforcement officers with the expertise necessary to coordinate crime prevention activities within their departments and communities, the late-October program session was the initial effort of the Statewide Crime Prevention Program. It is a coordinated state and local program to reduce criminal opportunity through law enforcement, community and individual citizen involvement.

The training session prepared the officers to respond the citizen's requests for crime prevention information and technical assistance. Participants received information on Community Watch, Operation Identification, locking devices, electronic security, personal security, shoplifting prevention, armed robbery prevention and the history and philosophy of crime prevention.

Crime prevention efforts had already been undertaken by the county police, with Ptm. Lennon and Ptm. Randy Williamson having spoken to groups which showed interest in setting up Community Watch Programs. The community nearest to implementing Crime Watch is Riegelwood, Acting Chief Wayne Piver said.

Because of the resignation of Whiteville's crime prevention officer, John Adams, the department's specialized efforts in that direction have been curtailed by a shortage of manpower, Chief Rick McLean reported. When two rookie officers complete their recruit training other officers will be relieved of some of their patrol responsibilities so the crime prevention program may be reactivated in full scope, McLean said.
