~ In Memoriam ~

*God saw that he was getting tired,
And a cure was not to be;
So He put His arms around him,
And whispered, "Come with Me."
With tearful eyes we watched him suffer,
And saw him fade away;
Although we loved him dearly,
We could not make him stay.
A golden heart stopped beating,
Working hands were laid to rest;
God broke our hearts to prove to us,
He only takes the best.*

Helen Gray Edmonds

I have been privileged..."to sit on the edge of tomorrow and contemplate the mysteries of time and space, man and mind...." hge

DR. HELEN GRAY EDMONDS departed this life Tuesday, May 9, 1995 at Duke University Medical Center after a brief illness.

Born in Lawrenceville, Virginia on December 3, 1911, she was the daughter of the late John and Ann Edmonds. She acquired her earliest training at Saint Paul's High School and Junior College as an honor student. She received the baccalaureate degree in History from Morgan State College (1933) and the Master of Art (1938) and Doctor of Philosophy degrees in History (1946) from The Ohio State University. She did post-doctoral research and study at the University of Heidelberg in West Germany in 1954-55.

A dedicated educator, Helen began her teaching career at The Virginia Theological Seminary and College in Lynchburg, Virginia. After a year, she returned to her Alma Mater, Saint Paul's College, and served as an instructor of history and English for 5 years. Because of her outstanding scholarly accomplishments and teaching record, President James E. Shepard recruited her as a faculty member at North Carolina College in Spring of 1941. From that time until her retirement in 1977, Dr. Edmonds served NCCU in many capacities - Professor of History, Advisory to the Drama Club, Chair of the Department of History, Dean of the Graduate School of Arts & Sciences, a member of the Interim Committee for the Administration of the University, Distinguished Professor of History, and author of NCCU's Truth and Service Ceremony. Her services to the University did not cease with her retirement, she served on the NCCU Board of Trustees, was appointed Trustee Emerita when her term expired, was a mentor to the Chancellors who were appointed after her retirement and was actively involved in numerous educational and cultural activities until the time of her death.

Through her primary employment in academe was at North Carolina Central University, Helen served as "visiting professor" and or lecturer at more than 100 institutions of higher learning (in the U.S. and abroad) including Portland State University, Rochester University, Virginia State University, The Ohio State University, MIT, Harvard, Radcliffe College, University of Stockholm, Free University of Berlin, University of Liberia, and the University of Monrovia. In recognition of her outstanding accomplishments in higher education, she received numerous honors and awards including The O. Max Gardner Award and The William Hugh McEniry Award. In addition, she served on the Boards of Trustees at Saint Paul's College, Voorhees College, Washington Technical Institute and North Carolina Central University. To her credit she received 8 honorary degrees from Morgan State, Shaw College at Detroit, Saint Paul's College, North Carolina Central University, The Ohio State University, Duke University, Virginia Union, and MacMurray College. With all these honors, Helen saw her greatest honor as that of being mentor and advisor to her history students. She boast that her greatest accomplishment was the number of students whom she had guided through the process of receiving their Ph.D. She claimed more than 30 in History and several others in related fields. Her scholarly publications are many appearing as books, articles, and professional papers.

Dr. Edmonds contributions were not limited to academe. She was actively involved at the local, national, and international levels in civic, governmental, and social organizations. She also was noted for being the "first black female" in several accomplishments. In 1956, she had the distinct honor to second the nomination of General Dwight D. Eisenhower as a candidate for the presidency of the United States at Republican National Convention. She was the U. S. presidential appointment on numerous occasions at home and abroad, and chaired the U. S. delegation to the Third Committee of the United Nations in 1970. She was appointed by President Nixon to serve on the National Advisory Council of the Peace Corps, The National Advisory Council to Education Professional Development of HEW-USOE, and Alternate Delegate to the General Assembly of the United Nations in celebration of their 25th year. She served in appointed capacities for the U. S. Department of State, the U. S. Department of Defense and on the Board of Directors for the International women's Year Conference in Mexico City. She received three citations from President Nixon in recognition for her governmental service.

In fulfilling her civic and social responsibilities, Dr. Edmonds was a member of the Links, Inc., Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, 100 Black Women, The National Council of Negro Women, Inc., and The National Council of Negro Women of the U. S. A. She served on the Board of Directors of the Southern Fellowship Fund, Inc, The United Negro College Fund, The NAACP Legal Defense Fund, The Robert Moton Memorial Institute and The United Research and Development Corporation. Awards for her civic involvement are numerous, the most recent - The Mary Church Terrell Award given by Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, Inc. at its 1994 National Convention.

One of Helen's fondest achievements was serving as the Fifth National President of the Links Incorporated, a public service organization with 260 chapters in 40 states, the District of Columbia, Germany and the Bahamas. During her presidential era, 1970 - 1974, she launched the grant-in-aid program which allowed the Links, Inc. to support worthy causes including a one million dollar contribution to The United Negro College Fund and created the idea of having permanent headquarters for the Links, Inc. in Washington, D. C.

Helen is survived by her sister of the home Mrs. Lucille E. Robinson; her brother, Mr. Harry J. Edmonds, Sr.; her sister-in-law Mrs. Rebecca P. Edmonds; a nephew Mr. Harry J. Edmonds, Jr.; three nieces Mrs. LuAnn Edmonds-Harris, and Mrs. Ann J. Edmonds of Durham, and Mrs. Joyce Edmonds, Charlotte; two grand nephews - Andrew E. Harris III, Durham, and Kyle W. NCCU professor Edmonds dies at 83

By ERNIE SUGGS

The Herald-Sun

Helen G. Edmonds, a vital part of the life of N.C. Central University for more than half of the 20th century, died Tuesday night at Duke University Hospital at age 83.

Dr. Edmonds was brought to the university as a professor in 1941 by NCCU founder James E. Shepard.

By the time she retired in 1977, Dr. Edmonds had served as a graduate professor of history, chairman of the department and dean of the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences.

She was a member of the NCCU board of trustees from 1983 until 1991. In 1986, the board voted to rename the building that houses the history department the Helen G. Edmonds Classroom Building. She also was named a distinguished professor emerita.

She was the first black woman to win the O. Max Gardner Award for outstanding teaching in the UNC system.

One of Dr. Edmonds' greatest achievements was the number of black students she helped inspire to greater heights. More than 30 went on to earn Ph.D.'s in history.

"She believed in scholarship," said Beverly Washington Jones, one of Edmonds' youngest Ph.D.'s. "She expected all of those she please see EDMONDS/A13 took under her wing to get a terminal degree."

But one of Dr. Edmonds' prized students never got a Ph.D. Instead, Julius Chambers went on to law school at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and became one of the country's pre-eminent civil rights attorneys.

During many public appearances, Dr. Chambers, now NCCU's chancellor, points out Dr. Edmonds as a key influence in his life.

"I met her as a student and she had a terrific and lasting impression on me," he said.

This March, several of Dr. Edmonds' former students participated in the second annual Helen G. Edmonds New South Lecture Series and Conference. Dr. Edmonds was too ill to attend, but provided a taped message.

"Never was there a lover of this institution who tried more devotedly than I to set standards of quality consonant with the true purposes of NCCU," she said.

Dr. Edmonds was born Dec. 3, 1911, to John and Ann Edmonds in Lawrenceville, Va. She remained in Lawrenceville to attend college at Saint Paul's Junior College before transferring to Morgan State University, where she graduated in 1933.

She went on to gain her master's degree from Ohio State University in 1938. She became the first black woman in that school's history to earn a doctorate in history in 1946.

During that time, Dr. Edmonds began her career as a professor. In 1934-35, she taught Latin, Greek and history at Virginia Theological Seminary, before going back to St. Paul's to teach history from 1935-1940.

In 1941, Dr. Shepard convinced her to come to what was then N.C. College for Negroes and teach in the history department, where she specialized in U.S. History after 1865, European diplomacy after 1870, and international relations

"There are women out there that can do the job if they are given the chance. If I had been given the chance, I could have done it," Dr. Edmonds said in a 1991 interview.

EDMONDS

In 1966, after the resignation of Samuel Massie as NCCU's president, Dr. Edmonds was placed on a three-person committee to oversee the university until a permanent chancellor was chosen. She had also interviewed for the presidencies of Mankato State, Cheyney State and Saint Paul's.

"It was not fashionable for women to be the president of a university," said Dr. Edmonds. "I was interviewed three times, but they just weren't making women presidents."

After retiring from NCCU, Dr. Edmonds became a visiting scholar at various institutions, including Rochester University, Virginia State, Ohio State, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Harvard University, Radcliffe College and Western Michigan.

But she always remained centered around Durham, living in her home on Nelson Street for 45 years.

"She was a good neighbor and a good friend," said 40-year-neighbor Loretha B. Parker. "She loved all the children on the street and they all called her Aunt Helen."

Aside from Dr. Edmonds' scholarly work, she was also politically active.

In 1956, she became the first black woman in history to second the nomination of a presidential candidate by endorsing Dwight D. Eisenhower at the Republican National Convention in San Francisco.

1870, and international relations.

Dr. Edmonds was part of a great influx of professors — including Dr. John Hope Franklin and Dr. Ernst Manasse — whom Dr. Shepard brought to NCCU in the '30s and '40s.

Although Dr. Edmonds came to teach history, she also took over the fledgling drama department, which was in chaos after the brief tenure and early dismissal of Zora Neale Hurston in 1940.

At the 1994 Founder's Day Ceremony, the NCCU Choir performed a pageant by Dr. Edmonds titled, "The Life and Times of Dr. James E. Shepard and the History of North Carolina College."

"She was not only a teacher, but a friend, a great motivator and inspirational role model," said Clemson University history professor Henry Suggs. "It was my regret that I didn't have a chance to take more courses under her."

For all that she achieved in the academic world, Dr. Edmonds' dream of becoming a college president was never fulfilled.

She also was an alternate delegate to the General Assembly of the United Nations; served on the National Advisory Council of the Peace Corps; and was a member of the Defense Advisory Council on Women in the Armed Services.

Dr. Edmonds is survived by a sister, Lucille Robinson of Durham; a brother, Harry Edmonds Sr., of Durham; one nephew; one niece; one grand-niece; and a grand-nephew. Funeral arrangements are incomplete.

In her taped message to the New South Conference, which turned out to be her last public address, Dr. Edmonds returned to a theme she had struck ever since walking onto the campus in 1941.

"My heart is filled with gratitude for every teacher I employed, for every student that sought to major in our department and to the thousands and thousands of Eagles who trod this sacred soil, who never had a class with me, but who could rise to the call that, 'The Eagle is no common, ordinary barnyard fowl.'"
